Downtown thermometer registers 21 in early afternoon

West basks

Warmest Jan. 18 ever — official 13, unofficial 21

It's not official, but the temperature in downtown Victoria hit a summery 21 degrees Celsius at about 3 p.m. Tuesday afternoon. That's what registered on thermometers downtown and the Cablevision weather scanner.

But even officially, the weather office says record highs were set at Pat Bay (13.3 degrees compared with the previous Jan. 18 high of 12.2 degrees in 1956) and at the Gonzales observatory, where the mercury hit 14.1 degrees.

The shirtsleeves 21-degree figure came from both a revolving thermometer at the Royal Trust building at Douglas and View and from Channel 10 cable's sensor.

A quick tour around Greater Victoria Tuesday afternoon brought glimpses of joggers down to T-shirts and shorts, a girl cyclist in a halter top, a sailboat out in Beaver Lake, a couple of hunters training their dogs — and unconfirmed reports of someone shooting ducks on Panama flats.

And although ewes are reporting lambing early on the Saanich Peninsula, the weatherman warns it's far too early for a young man's fancy to turn to love.

"Don't start talking spring yet, or you'll really bring it down on us," he said Tuesday night.

However, U.S. weather officials said the 30-day outlook for this area indicates continuing mild weather.

A cool front that passed through Washington state Tuesday morning permitted clearing and an intake of warm Pacific air to bathe most of Vancouver Island in Hawaiian-style warmth.

We can still feel smug about the weather compared with the deep-freeze which has eastern Canada and much of the Atlantic United States in the worst winter grip for years, but the weatherman isn't optimistic for more sunshine today.

A cool front that headed in late Tuesday night was expected to bring a low of 5, with mild cloudy weather today, followed by rain and drizzle this afternoon.

Thursday's weather forecast calls for showers. Rain in the 24 hours to 11 p.m. Monday amounted to 39.2 mm, nearly an inch and a half.

Fuel crimp adds woes

Associated Press

Energy conservation, a theme from the days of oil embargoes, was a stark reality to many in the midwestern and eastern regions of the United States on Tuesday as severe winter cold maintained its grip.

Record-breaking low temperatures clogged navigable waterways with ice, severely hampering traffic on such widespread transportation lanes as the Ohio, Mississippi and Thames rivers and the Great Lakes.

Ice floes were as high as 12 feet in some parts of the Mississippi River near St. Louis, officials reported.

Mel Doernhoefer, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's corps of engineers, said: "When you consider that 60 per cent of the millions of tons of cargo that move past St. Louis each year is fossil fuel—coal, fuel oil or gas—you have to believe that some power plants and factories up the Illinois River toward Chicago are going to be hurting soon."

Similar conditions on the Ohio River already have forced cuts in power production and industry as far east as Pennsylvania. Portions of the Ohio were frozen solid, for the first time since 1948, officials said.

Pennsylvania Lt.-Gov. Ernest Kline declared a state of emergency Monday. He said his chief concern was a critical natural gas delivery problem in the western part of the state.

Officials of the three gas companies that supply the area's 750,000 customers said they have sufficient supplies of gas, but pressure in the pipeline delivery system cannot be maintained under the demand for fuel.

The company executives met Tuesday to decide when schools might be reopened and when 300 industries—including steel plants—might expect renewed delivery. Their best estimate was next week.

School closings also brought tragedy when four children, who normally would have been in school, were killed in a Springfield, Mo., house fire.

Hydro 'out of control'

Debt will soon exceed total budget of B.C.

House leader of the New Democratic Party William King (Revelstoke-Slocan) said Tuesday night he thought B.C. Hydro was now completely out of the control of politicians in the Legislature.

King made the statement outside the chamber after the Legislature was asked to approve a bill increasing the borrowing power of Hydro from $3.5 billion to $4.150 billion, an increase of $650 million over present borrowing limits.

The bill will be debated later in the session.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said the increased borrowing power was required to meet anticipated capital costs of Hydro over the next year, to meet increasing energy requirements.

King said he was concerned that the total indebtedness of Hydro would then exceed the total B.C. budget if the bill was approved. The current budget for the 1976-77 fiscal year totals $3.6 billion.

"I'm afraid the bureaucracy within Hydro is too strong," King said. "They are perpetuating that bureaucracy by projecting ever-increasing power loads. I'm afraid they are completely out of control."

King said there was a remarkable difference between the energy predictions of Hydro and the energy predictions made by the B.C. Energy Commission.

"It seems to me that the time has come when Hydro can no longer be trusted to make its own energy requirement predictions," King said. "It should no longer be allowed to set its own targets. We must have an independent body like the energy commission to set the targets.

"The Hydro debt load is becoming, in fact will soon become, too heavy for the people of this province to carry."

Premier Bennett doesn't share that view. He said it had to be remembered with Hydro that it had "tremendous assets" to cover its indebtedness.

Insiders' windfalls from ICBC salvage

By PAUL BENNETT
Colonist Reporter

No clear guidelines exist for the disposal of at least $100,000 worth of non-automotive salvage by the Insurance Corp. of B.C. each year, the Colonist has learned.

Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) said he intended to investigate the possibility of conflict of interest by ICBC employees owing to the "ridiculous" lack of guidelines.

He will place written questions on the Legislature order paper as a start to his investigation.

ICBC's policy for the disposal of goods ranging from boats through furniture to bicycles does not require advertising or otherwise making public the fact the goods are available, according to an ICBC official.

"In the case of a large item like a recovered stolen boat, we might advertise it," the official said, "but it's just not worth it for most items."

Here the procedure is simply that ICBC clerks phone people they think might be interested, such as second-hand dealers, and let them know what will be up for grabs.

Tanker snaps in half, three seamen missing

MIDWAY ISLAND (UPI) — A U.S. Coast Guard search plane scanned the Pacific Tuesday in search of three men missing after a Liberian tanker broke in half 200 miles southeast of Midway Island, dumping its cargo of 950 tons of fuel oil in a huge brown patch 10 miles wide and 15 miles long across the tropical waters.

The fate of three men, stranded on the bow section of the tanker Irenes Challenger when she split in two late Monday night, was unknown. Twenty-eight others aboard the tanker were rescued from the aft section by the Pacific Arrow, a Japanese freighter.

The three missing crewmen were seen alive board their floating half of the ship late Monday night, but at dawn they were no longer seen, and the fore section was up-ended.

A BETTER WAY THAN JAIL

No job of joy but better than boredom

Third of four parts
By King Lee
Colonist Reporter

As one might expect, persons ordered to perform community service work orders by Victoria provincial court judges, are not enthusiastic about it.

The reasons given most frequently are no monetary return and personal inconvenience.

But they perform the assigned duties because the judges, during sentencing, remind them that if they do not follow the probation officers' orders, they can be charged with the separate offence of breach of probation.

And the last thing most of them want is more trouble with the law.

The attitude seems to be, in many cases, get the thing over with.

Don Peterson and Dave Stallard, the two community services officers in the Victoria office at Douglas and Fisgard streets, provided Colonist reporter Stephen Hume with the names of some people who have performed the work.

These people, the officers thought, could provide an interesting cross-section of opinion about the program and its benefits, if any.

Hume, who has disguised the names of those with whom he spoke, relates the impressions of those obliged to do something for nothing.

Dennis thinks the community services program is the lesser of two evils. The greater evil is boredom.

"It's better than going to jail. But it's kind of a drag working eight hours a day for nothing," he said.

He doesn't have a long arrest record. He's 18 and he's been busted twice. The first time was for marijuana possession.

"It was a single joint. I was fined $75," he said.

The second time was for breaking and entering. The judge gave Dennis nine months' probation and 40 hours community work.

Dennis worked off his hours landscaping and putting in lawns for the town of Sidney. He worked one week for 40 hours. At the end of the week the town took him on as a temporary employee to "see how I'd work out," as Dennis put it. They liked his work and hired him at the end of April.

Dennis worked eight months for the Sidney parks department. He was laid off on Jan. 1, but he said he will probably be hired on again in the summer. His probation is over in January.

His estimation of the community services program: "It's better than standing around the streets doing nothing."

Tony is 20. He has nothing nice to say about the program. He didn't like working for nothing, and he didn't feel

Egyptians rioting over prices

CAIRO (AP) — Thousands of Egyptians angered by government-ordered price increases rioted in Cairo and the port city of Alexandria Tuesday night, stoning police, setting fire to police stations and denouncing President Anwar Sadat amid chants of "Nasser, Nasser, Nasser."

Gamal Abdel Nasser, Sadat's late predecessor, was popular with the peasants and the urban poor, the group hardest hit by the price increases.

Legionnaire disease pinned down at last

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — A bacterium-like organism previously unknown as a human killer caused the Legionnaires' Disease which killed 29 persons in Philadelphia, Pa. last summer, the national Centre for Disease Control announced Tuesday.

The organism, which the CDC called a bacterium for purposes of identification, was isolated from lung tissue of one of the victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, which struck 151 other persons who eventually recovered. Most of the victims were members of the American Legion attending a convention at a Philadelphia hotel.

The CDC said it was not known how the victims contracted the disease.

"In the routine process of making sure we had not missed a rickettsia, we found the bacterium," said Dr. Joseph McDade, a research microbiologist who isolated the organism.

A rickettsia is an organism between bacterium and virus on the biologic scale.

"It appears to be something we've never associated with human illness," McDade said.

Researchers said the disease caused by the organism, which has no name, was apparently not contagious.

"You know whether a disease is contagious or not by whether or not it spreads among the patients' contacts," said Dr. Charles Shepard, chief of the leprosy and rickettsia branch of the CDC.

The disease might have been spread by air or water, said Dr. David Fraser, a medical epidemiologist. He said research showed that "the risk of Legionnaires' Disease was greater in those who smoked cigarettes."

That, he said, was common among respiratory infections.

"There was no spread," of the disease among those who came in contact with victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, Shepard said.

"There is no danger to anyone in their communities whatsoever," he emphasized.

Tests involving cultures of the new bacteria and from an early 1960s outbreak of pneumonia at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington showed that the cause of the St. Elizabeth's outbreak which killed eight persons at the psychiatric hospital was a similar organism.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska Tuesday invited president-elect Jimmy Carter to move the entire inauguration to Anchorage and avoid the bitter cold in Washington.

"The sun is not yet up in Anchorage, but it is already 44 degrees (6 Celsius)," he told his colleagues.

Airlines seek fare boosts

MONTREAL (UPI) — Air Canada and CP Air Tuesday announced they had applied for domestic air fare increases of up to seven per cent to cover higher costs for fuel and wages.

Montreal-based Air Canada said it was seeking a general seven per cent increase from the Canadian transport commission, while in Vancouver CP Air said it had asked for seven and five per cent boosts.

The increases, normally granted routinely, would be effective March 1. Both airlines said the new rates, which must be approved by the Anti-Inflation Board, fall within AIB guidelines.

Government-owned Air Canada's fare increase, which would bring the cost of a Vancouver-Toronto flight up $26 to $382, will be the third imposed in less than a year. The company's fares went up eight per cent in April, 1976, and 4.5 per cent in September.

CP Air said it seeks a seven per cent increase on transcontinental routes in economy class, with first class rates up 60 per cent instead of the current 50 per cent over economy, and an approximate five per cent boost in western Canada domestic services.

The company said continuing rising costs, especially in fuel and wages, had necessitated the higher fares.

CP said the increased costs must be passed on to customers because economies previously achieved from the efficiency and capacity of the big jets were absorbed in past years.

Air Canada said first class fares would also be increased, to be figured on the same percentage basis as those of CP.

Air Canada marketing vice president John McGill said the new increases, which were estimated to give the airline an additional $22 million, were necessitated by "rising costs in all sectors of the company's operation," citing particularly fuel and manpower cost boosts.

"These are the two largest components of total costs facing the company this year," McGill said. "Together, they will represent an additional $72 million in expenses over 1976."

Whom they advise is entirely at their own discretion.

The ICBC official in an interview from Vancouver, said general salvage items were not advertised because it would be uneconomic to do so.

He rejected a suggestion that a public auction be held every two or three months, to dispose of the goods, because it would require heated space to keep them in, along with security guards and other associated costs.

(ICBC salvage lots contain large numbers of vehicles and are already heavily protected against thieves.)

In the course of its investigations, the Colonist learned that a "wholesale cleanup" of salvage methods for automobiles took place in ICBC about this time last year.

Many ICBC officials were fired for conflict of interest misdeeds, and the outcome of the cleanup was that only licensed auto repair shops and wreckers are now permitted to bid on automobile salvage.

As a result of new regulations surrounding automobile disposal, it is no longer possible for the previous owner of a written-off vehicle to have first right of refusal to buy it back and have it repaired.

Although this initially caused chagrin among some motorists, a method has been found to placate them. For a fee of say, $25, a licensed repairer will bid on the vehicle and undertake to fix it. Repair costs are, of course, extra.

The second result of the house-cleaning was that ICBC was getting higher bids for automobile salvage, which reduced the cost of premiums.

But the house-cleaning didn't extend to general salvage, covered by non-automotive insurance underwritten by ICBC, with the result that a favored few who have the inside track with ICBC clerks at the salvage depots are picking up goods for far less than their real worth.

For example, a beige easy chair, believed to be from a provincial cabinet minister's office, with a slight split that was barely visible, was sold for $90. Its estimated original cost was $1,000.

Another bargain was the central console from a school's public address system. Stolen but recovered undamaged, it cost ICBC more than $1,000 to replace. The purchaser was believed to be a teacher who heard about it on the grapevine and picked it up with a $300 bid.

ICBC officials aren't permitted to bid on salvage themselves, but obviously nothing could prevent one from tipping a friend to a good buy, with the pair splitting the difference in the profits on resale, one source close to ICBC observed.

He noted that ICBC was a crown corporation dealing with public funds and suggested public business should be done in public.

like doing the work. Community services officers Stallard and Peterson said they had to "lean on him" to get him to show up for work.

Tony was convicted this year of breaking and entering and theft. The judge gave him 150 hours community service work, two years' probation, and 16 weekends at Metchosin Camp.

Tony has finished his community work and "graduated" from the camp, he said. He still has his probation to work on. He is unemployed.

"I'm just glad it's over," he says of his 150 hours' community service. "Some mornings I just didn't feel like getting up."

Tony worked his 150 hours by washing dishes at the Salvation Army, cleaning offices at St. John Ambulance, and helping build a playground for the Victoria West neighborhood centre.

"It was a pain in the neck," he concluded.

Mary has done community service twice. On both occasions the orders were for impaired driving convictions.

She is a single parent, in her 40s. Her first sentence was for 20 hours, the second for 70.

Part of the sentencing required her to take a course for impaired drivers. She saw movies of alcohol-related accidents and listened to police and Alcoholics Anonymous lectures. She thinks the course should be required before a driver's licence is issued anyone.

Although impaired drivers who are second-offenders usually get a mandatory jail sentence, Mary had a lucky break. Her second charge was read in court before the first one. Because of this mixup she was given a community service job for both convictions.

Her only worry when she talked to this reporter was that her children would find out about her convictions.

She said she feels badly about the convictions but feels good about working off her hours at the Salvation Army. She worked there from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. usually five days a week.

"It all depends on the attitude you have. Some people feel resentful about having to do community service work, but I don't. Dave Stallard and Don Peterson (community service officers) are great guys. I feel that in my case, everything has worked out for the best," she said.

Frank will be 22 this year. He's been in juvenile and adult penal institutions off and on since he was 14. "He had a record as long as both your arms," Stallard and Peterson said.

When he was convicted of breaking and entering and theft in 1976, the judge gave him 200 hours community service, the maximum given to adults. (Juveniles can get a maximum 100 hours.) He was also handed 18 months' probation.

Frank was given the job of painting the house of a war veteran's widow.

"It gave me a chance to get back up on my feet and get going. Working there went so smoothly it was like clockwork. I was only supposed to paint the outside of her house but after I did the outside she asked me to paint her bathroom and the porch too," he said.

"Working there made me feel good and it made her feel good too. It helped me get my head together."

After he finished the house, Frank started looking for work. Peterson helped find him a job in an appliance store in Victoria.

Frank was recently laid off and is looking for work once more. He doesn't look on weekends, though. As part of a prior penalty, he's spending his weekends in Wilkinson Road Jail.

"I had 10 weekends to serve at Wilkie. I've got seven left," he said.

Frank said he wished there were more programs like community service.

He also wishes he had a job.

Your Good Health

Dear Dr. Thosteson: I have had one mammogram and have been advised by my doctor that I should have one each year. I do not have a malignancy at this time. Please advise if, in your opinion, it is dangerous to have mammograms each year.

I have read that this can induce cancer. I am very apprehensive about this possibility, and would appreciate your thinking on this as would many other women. — Mrs. T.M.L.

There's some controversy about this matter, as you know, and the final chapter is yet to be written.

The American Cancer Society estimates that this year breast cancer will be detected in 89,000 women, and that one out of 15 American women will develop breast cancer sometime during their lives. The earlier detected, the more effective the treatment.

Others argue that before age 35 a mammogram (X-ray of breast tissue) is not as reliable as afterwards. This is because the younger breast tissue is more dense and more difficult to penetrate and show abnormality. Stronger X-rays are needed.

Self-examination of the breast is effective, but chances are it will not reveal a lump until it has "been cooking" for a while. Mammography can often detect these changes earlier.

Still, the risk of x-rays is present, although probably mininal. The answer seems to lie in development of newer, lower-dosage, high-speed x-ray film, which, as I understand things, would diminish the danger of exposure.

My personal view is that no examination is worse than one with minimal risk, especially if a woman has a history (of her own or in her family) that suggests the possibility of lump or cancer development. The individual doctor is the best judge of this, based on such factors.

A once-a-year mammogram doesn't seem too great a risk considering the need for early detection. After 35 the balance swings even further in favor of having the mammogramm, more so after 50.

LEGISLATIVE BRIEFS

Hydro ready to export excess power—Davis

Transport and Energy Minister Jack Davis says B.C. Hydro is prepared to sell any excess electricity it may have to northwest United States power companies.

Davis told reporters Monday the crown corporation wouldn't be making any sales immediately and that he was not sure whether any excess would be available.

He made the statement after Don Hodel, of the Bonneville power administration, said during the weekend that power cutbacks to industry were planned beginning next week because of the lack of rain for hydro-electric generation.

Hodel said the administration would be seeking to buy extra electricity from any available source.

Davis said B.C. has not been as badly affected by lack of rain as have northwest U.S. states and that in the past B.C. Hydro has exported power when it had a surplus.

The Insurance Corporation of B.C. still has debts of between $4 million and $5 million, corporation president Pat McGeer told the Legislature Monday.

Dennis Cocke (NDP—New Westminster) had asked why drivers using the ICBC time-payment plan this year would be charged 15 per cent interest while car and truck fleet owners would pay the same rates as last year.

McGeer said ICBC was trying to bring its interest rates into line with other charge accounts. He said even banks charged more interest than ICBC.

He didn't answer Cocke's question as to why fleet owners appeared to escape the interest rate increase.

"Bad debts are between $4 million and $5 million," McGeer said. "We are hoping to do better, but so far it is not good."

□

This year's throne speech promised a "team approach" to matters affecting economic development in B.C.

And Gordon Gibson (L—North Vancouver-Capilano) is wondering where the team has gone.

"Half of it has already been sent to the shower, she told the Legislature Tuesday. "The minister is still there — maybe he's going to do it all himself."

He was referring to the dismissal of Economic Development Minister Donald Phillips' right hand man, Arthur Weeks, for trading in Quasar and Cheyenne Petroleum Company shares and the subsequent resignation of Phillips' constituency secretary, Arthur Cameron, for the same reason.

□

Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) continued his battle Tuesday to try to persuade the provincial government to reduce the seven per cent provincial sales tax.

He admits he doesn't have much chance of success.

But he hold the Legislature that Woodward's Stores in B.C. had shown their first loss in 50 years since the tax was boosted from five to seven per cent.

"And retail stores have stated quite clearly that sales have been depressed as a result of the sales tax and other tax increases, causing these stores to lay off staff and thus further add to unemployment," Wallace said.

Removal of prostitution as an offence under the criminal code would help clean up court room logjams, Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) told the Legislature Tuesday.

Wallace, a doctor, said he was not advocating legalization of prostitution. "I'm just saying that it is not as bad an offence as impaired driving. It just isn't a criminal offence and should be removed from the Criminal Code."

Budget date

Debate deal out —Cocke

Dennis Cocke, New Democratic Party whip, said Tuesday night he would not be "blackmailed or sandbagged" by the government in order to bring this year's budget down on its traditional Friday.

Under this year's legislative schedule, the budget will be made public by Finance Minister Evan Wolfe on Monday afternoon. That will limit opposition parties to one night of study before entering the budget debate the next day.

Premier Bennett said Tuesday he was prepared to entertain a deal to cut debate on the throne speech by one day to enable the budget to be introduced Friday afternoon, thus allowing the opposition a weekend of study before debate begins.

"No way," Cocke said. "We are not going to be blackmailed or sandbagged by these people. The throne speech is one of the longest on record and we intend to debate it to the full. They could have commenced this session on Wednesday, Jan. 12, just as easily as Thursday the 13th. That's if they knew what they were doing, which I sometimes doubt."

Under the house rules, throne speeches can be debated for a maximum of six days or eight sittings, not including the day of the speech.

That timetable means the throne speech debate will end at 1 p.m. Friday.

Yugoslav PM dies in crash

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (UPI) — A U.S.-built Lear jet carrying Prime Minister Dzemal Bijedic and seven other persons crashed in a snowstorm southwest of Sarajevo Tuesday. All aboard the craft died, the government said.

Military helicopters spotted the crash site in central Yugoslavia, but were unable to reach it during the storm, Yugoslav sources said.

Bijedic, 59, had been prime minister since 1971. He also served as president of the federal executive council, and the sources said his successor was expected to be one of the council's four vice-presidents.

The federal executive council was called into session eight hours after the crash. "At this moment, nobody knows who will succeed him," one source said.

The U.S.-built government plane had been ferrying Bijedic and his wife to Sarajevo from Belgrade. The prime minister had been at the capital's Batajnica military airport earlier to bid farewell to President Tito, who left for a visit to Tripoli, Libya.

Tito sent a telegram of condolences from Libya to Bijedic's daughter and two sons. He said the "irreparable loss" of the prime minister and his 49-year-old wife "shocked us deeply."

The government announced a state funeral would be held Friday, when Tito is due back in Yugoslavia.

Police marched into restaurants in the capital Tuesday night and ordered a ban on music and dancing to show respect for Bijedic. Friday will be an official day of mourning.

Bijedic, a tall, well-built native of Herzegovina, one of Yugoslavia's six constituent republics, joined the Communist Party in 1933. Eight years later he joined Tito's partisans in their battles against the Nazi occupation.

After a series of post-war party and government jobs he was elected prime minister in 1971, during Tito's showdown with Croatian nationalists and Serbian liberals. He won re-election to a full four-year term in May 1974.

The line of succession in Yugoslavia calls for a prime minister nominee to be chosen by the eight-man presidency and elected by the national assembly.

Economic view: Growth slowing, B.C. hopes strong

OTTAWA (CP) — Growth of provincial economies is likely to show a significant drop in 1977 from 1976 levels, following national trends in economic activity, the Conference Board in Canada says in a report released Tuesday.

The board says real economic growth in the country will decline to about three per cent this year from about five per cent in 1976, unless the government stimulates the economy.

The board is a private group, including business, government and labor representatives, which develops economic forecasts.

The forecast says that in line with a less optimistic outlook for the national economy, projected growth in real output for almost all provinces has been revised downward from previous predictions made last November.

Government spokesmen, including Finance Minister Donald Macdonald and international observers, have said economic recovery in the last half of 1976 was not as speedy as expected all over the Western industrial world.

With pressure mounting from business, labor and opposition political parties for stimulative policies, such as tax cuts, Macdonald promised in December there would be a new federal budget within four months.

The board report says that Alberta and British Columbia are expected to show the strongest growth in 1977, with both considerably exceeding the national average.

But a poor outlook for spending on capital goods, consumer goods and housing is likely to hamper growth in the manufacturing and construction sectors, making the future dim for both Quebec and Ontario.

Both Ontario and Quebec are expected to have growth rates of less than three per cent, with only modest employment gains and substantial rises in provincial jobless rates.

Agricultural output is expected by the board to decline this year following a strong performance in 1976. This will mean Saskatchewan, which had the highest growth in output last year, may turn in the weakest in 1977, the board says.

The board expects New Brunswick and Nova Scotia to outperform the national economy, but Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Manitoba will grow at rates slightly below the national average.

A brief summary of outlook for each province follows:

● British Columbia: Growth will be 4.1 per cent this year, compared with 5.6 per cent in 1976. While construction and fishing will be weak, these will be offset by moderate gains in agriculture, mining and manufacturing. Forestry will continue to perform strongly, though not at 1976 levels. The average jobless rate will remain unchanged at about 8.5 per cent.

● Newfoundland: Real growth will be about 2.9 per cent, a considerable decline from the 5.1 per cent of 1976. Forestry and manufacturing will show improvement in 1977, but mining and fishing, which had been exceptionally strong last year, will not continue at the 1976 pace. Unemployment, which averaged 13.5 per cent in 1976, will probably rise to the 14.3-per-cent average it was in 1975.

● Prince Edward Island: Real growth will be about three per cent, with the service and construction sectors showing strength. There will be some weakness in agriculture and fishing sectors, which were strong enough in 1976 to help boost output to five per cent for the province. A marginal growth in unemployment is expected.

● Nova Scotia: The economy will grow by 3.8 per cent with strength in mining, forestry and service industries. Agriculture, fishing and construction will be relatively weak. Average unemployment this year will be close to 11 per cent.

● New Brunswick: The province should have a growth rate of 3.6 per cent in 1977, a considerable turnaround from last year, when it had the lowest growth rate. There will be improvement in the forestry, mining, construction and service sectors. Unemployment will remain high, about 11 per cent.

● Quebec: Growth will be about 2.75 per cent in 1977, down from about 4.9 per cent last year. Prospects are down for the forestry, mining, manufacturing, construction and service sectors. The board says there may be substantial rises in unemployment, with an average of more than 10 per cent this year.

● Ontario: Economic growth will be about 2.9 per cent in 1977, down from 5.1 per cent last year. Projected growth in mining, manufacturing and service industries has been revised downward since last fall, and expected declines in construction and agriculture may be worse than previously forecast. An unemployment average of seven per cent is expected in 1977, compared with 6.2 per cent last year.

● Manitoba: Growth will be at about 2.9 per cent compared with four per cent last year. Agriculture may be the weakest sector this year, while the goods-producing industries may show some strength. Unemployment is expected to increase only marginally.

● Saskatchewan: The expected 1976 growth rate of 8.8 per cent for the province will plunge dramatically this year to an actual decline in output of eight-tenths of one per cent. Strong 1976 performances in agriculture, mining and construction will be reversed this year. But unemployment should remain stable at about four per cent.

● Alberta: The provincial economy is expected to be the strongest in 1977 with growth of 4.75 per cent, compared with 5.4 per cent in 1976. Strength in resource production, manufacturing, construction and services will offset agriculture declines. The jobless rate will remain lowest in the country at less than four per cent.

Old don't tell about illnesses

EDMONTON (CP) — Elderly persons fail to report illnesses to family, friends and physicians because society treats old age as a disease, says a visiting British physician. Dr. Colin Powell, senior lecturer of the department of geriatric medicine at Liverpool University, said old persons usually are told to expect aches and pains simply because they're getting older.

Leftists blast Prince Philip

LONDON (Reuter) — Prime Philip was called one of Britain's best-kept welfare clients Tuesday by left-wing politicians angry at his latest remarks on the economy.

They criticized the prince for his "state of the nation" article in the magazine Director, which quotes him comparing Britain's economic situation with dry rot in a building.

"You don't know where it starts, you don't know when the crisis is, but gradually the place becomes uninhabitable," said the 55-year-old Duke of Edinburgh.

Ruling Labor party member of Parliament Tom Little said that as "one of the best-kept social security claimants in the country, I think he ought to have spoken with a better sense of responsibility."

Little was referring to the $104,000 annual sum the prince receives from the state.

Another Labor MP, Maureen Colquhoun, described the prince as "rather a British joke, the king of anachronism that the country has to live with when he makes a public statement."

Director is a conservative monthly journal of about 45,000 circulation published by the Institute of Directors, a professional body supported by Britain's big business chiefs.

In the interview, Philip said socialist Britain had "virtually left the league of the big powers" and was heading for the status of a Third World nation.

He laid much of the blame on high taxation and socialist measures that he said had robbed the enterprising of any incentive.

"He was talking straight Victorian," said Labor MP Tom Litterick. "That statement is straight out of Queen Victoria's age — it is arrogance."

"Amateurs are always telling us how to do our job," said Renee Short, a Labor MP. "He is trying to put the clock back and I do not think people would wear that."

But opposition Conservative party MP Norman St. John-Stevas defended the prince.

"What he has to say is extremely interesting and very true." Prince Philip's remarks were "balanced, intelligent and informed," he added.

While not attacking Prime Minister James Callaghan's Labor government by name, the prince had scathing things to say about both the British and Soviet forms of socialism.

He said the British had become too concerned with the underprivileged:

"In a great effort to make life easier for people, we have really, in many cases, removed the one thing that makes it interesting, which is a challenge and an opportunity, a risk both of loss and gain.

"We have forgotten one end of the story. We are constantly making it seem that because people, some people, are badly off, therefore the people who are better off are wrong. We seem to have got the balance slightly wrong."

Gandhi calls vote as rule softens

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi — declaring her "unshakable faith in the power of the people" — announced Tuesday that parliamentary elections would take place in March as part of a major relaxation of her 19-month emergency rule.

"Let us go to the polls with the resolve to reaffirm the power of the people and to uphold the fair name of India as a land committed to the path of reconciliation, peace and progress," Mrs. Gandhi said in an eight-minute national broadcast.

The elections will be the first since Mrs. Gandhi proclaimed a state of emergency June 26, 1975, following her conviction on election fraud charges. She suspended civil liberties, jailed opposition leaders and imposed censorship on the news media, and said the measures were needed to quell a "threat to internal stability."

The government previously had won Parliament's approval to postpone elections until March, 1978. They were originally set for last March at the end of the regular five-year term of the lower house of Parliament.

Mrs. Gandhi's surprise announcement came three hours after the government freed her arch political rival, former deputy prime minister Morarji Desai, and L. K. Advani, leader of the right-wing Hindu nationalist Jana Sangh party. About a dozen parliamentarians are still in jail, including Socialist leader Raj Narain, sources said.

No arsenic coverup—Lalonde

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister Marc Lalonde has denied charges by the National Indian Brotherhood that his department is trying to cover up the arsenic situation in Yellowknife.

Lalonde told a news conference Tuesday that the independent study group his department announced earlier in the day would be the easiest method to evaluate the conflicting conclusions of various studies on Yellowknife arsenic levels. The group would be able to authorize further research if necessary.

Earlier, Lloyd Tataryn, Brotherhood research director, said the study group — the fourth federal Yellowknife arsenic study commissioned in the last 20 years — "indicates the health minister has been caught with his pants down and is trying to cover up."

The most marked conflict in findings exists between past federal studies, which concluded that arsenic does not pose a public health problem in Yellowknife, and a study the Brotherhood released Sunday which said "dangerously high arsenic levels" exist in the city.

Researchers found levels up to 50 times the World Health Organization safety level of five parts per million in human hair. The federal health department has no arsenic safety levels set for hair.

Lalonde refused to comment on the study's charge that health department officials had lied about Yellowknife cancer rates. Department officials said they were lower than the national average. Brotherhood researchers using statistics from Statistics Canada found the cancer death rate was nearly twice the national average.

Lalonde said this was something the study group would investigate.

Arsenic is a poisonous substance found in gold-bearing ore which escapes into the air, water and soil during mining and smelting. Continued high levels in humans can cause respiratory illness, nervous disorders and cancer.

There are two gold mining operations in Yellowknife and they constitute the city's largest industry outside of government, a Brotherhood spokesman said.

Lalonde said this consideration must be balanced with health considerations and that "people's livelihoods must be taken into account," when deciding if more stringent clean-up measures are needed.

The study was done jointly by the Brotherhood, the United Steelworkers of America union and the University of Toronto.

Bikeways for safety

THERE ARE HIGH HOPES that the first bikeway in the capital city will be completed in 1977 after grinding years of planning and work. It runs between the University of Victoria and the city centre and is the model of a network of "paths" planned for safer cycling by the Regional Bikeway Committee which is composed of representatives of all municipalities on the lower island, the Capital Regional District, the provincial government and the local branch of the Community Planning Association of Canada.

Sidney hasn't had the problems, apparently, that have made for slow progress in the Victoria-Saanich undertaking and already has free-wheeled its way to two miles of bikeways.

But with additional funding from the federal Local Initiatives Program, along with donations from local firms and individuals, there is sufficient money on hand to put the first four miles of the planned Victoria area system all together this year.

Saanich has received a $23,000 L.I.P. grant on top of one for $62,180 in 1975 for the express purpose of carrying out its share of the work and the city has been given $47,000 from the same source. There also is $10,200 in private donations.

It can only be hoped that the amount of money being expended will be justified by the use made of the facility, but apart from that there is reason for concern in the UVic-downtown bikeway over how safe it will be for cycling.

If it separated bicycles from motor traffic all well and good. But it won't over much of its four miles. There are sections still to be paved that will keep bikes and cars apart but the sides of roads must be utilized to a great extent which, granted, will be clearly marked for cycling only. But the big problem crops up at intersections and driveways where the bike rider must cross the flow of motor traffic. This is where most car-bicycle conflicts have always taken place and much more than warning signs will be needed to guard against the possibility of an increase in accident rates.

The worry is that bikeways can give cyclists a false sense of security and the caution now taken in mingling with motor traffic could be abandoned. Bike crossing signs that have already appeared don't warn that the pedal-pusher must yield to motorists. They give the impression that bicycles have the right of way which should be corrected.

Needed, too, is a stepped-up program of law enforcement. If cyclists were called to task for traffic violations, as motorists are, greater care would be taken in the operation of two-wheelers. There should be measures that go beyond the enforcement of the laws, as well. A bike buyer can purchase one in parts, put it together and sally forth with no inspection of the vehicle or testing for knowledge of the rules of the road and skill as a rider. Bikeways or not, this is something that needs to be done here and now.

"Any chance of being deported to Cuba?"

In need of overhaul

EDMONTON-STRATHCONA MP Douglas Roche's demand for a complete overhaul of Canada's $1 billion foreign aid program has not come before its time. For years public concern has been expressed over the administration and distribution of Canadian help to the needy nations of the world.

Last week, having recently returned from a six-week study tour of Asia in which he examined the operation of the Canadian International Development Agency in Indonesia and Bangladesh, Mr. Roche reported that the agency had failed in its task and that its failure was "a strong indictment of Canadian aid."

"The time has come," he said, "when those who feel warmest toward the Third World should probe the faults and failures of policies in both the development and developing nations . . . what I saw on my Asian trip has made me determined to throw more public light on CIDA in order to improve Canada's assistance to developing countries."

It will be interesting to see how far Mr. Roche gets with his view that the role of CIDA should be thoroughly examined by the parliamentary sub-committee on international development.

If by some remote chance such an examination were made Canadians might find out why $14,000,000 of Canadian aid went to Cuba — made up of a $10 million long-term loan at 3 per cent and $4 million in outright grants in which were included $1.7 million for fisheries development and $1.1 million for the University of Havana — and $3 million in food aid plus the services of 13 engineer instructors and university scholarships for 91 students went to Algeria.

Certainly neither of these countries would appear to qualify for Canadian aid under the principles presently laid down by Ottawa. However, there might be extenuating circumstances for both: Cuba could be running a little short of cash through maintaining its large army of mercenaries in Angola and Algeria might have found that its high-priced oil can't be used as food.

Road to separatism

What Quebec really wanted

By LUBOR J. ZINK from Ottawa

Ever since the "Quiet Revolution" of our francophone community started exploding in Westmount mailboxes, the rest of Canada has been agonizing over what it was that Quebec really wanted. That haunting question, which grew more frustrating the bigger the pacifiers handed to Quebec became, was finally answered last month when Quebecers put in power a government committed to secession from Confederation.

★ ★ ★

The haunting question now is why and how we arrived at the breaking point.

Since the "why" cannot be answered without understanding the "how," let's look at the patch which took us to the forking of the road.

Throughout the 1960s, most English-speaking Canadians assumed that Quebec was after bilingualism in the federal structure, and after more money from the federal treasury. This impression was reinforced by the torrent of reports and studies produced by the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism (the commission Pearson's first minority government established in 1963 with the hope of keeping Quebec's "Quiet Revolution" quiet).

The demand for more federal funds and the right to use them at the discretion of the government in Quebec City became a standard feature of the federal-provincial conferences and of direct Ottawa-Quebec negotiations.

Below this visible, amply publicized and endlessly analyzed surface, perceptive observers soon detected a steady and strong undercurrent of emotion-laden political pressures for considerably more than money and extension of bilingualism beyond the confines stipulated in the BNA Act. Unfortunately, attempts to bring these pressures to public attention were poohpoohed as paranoid alarmism and generally fell on deaf ears. As always, comfortable self-delusions were preferred to warning voices of brewing trouble.

Nonetheless, by about the middle of the past decade it became apparent to serious students of the problem that what Quebec really wanted, while the rest of the country was still only waking up to the two visible issues of bilingualism and money was a fundamental restructuring of political and economic powers that would give the francophones "equality of partnership" in Confederation.

As conceived by Quebec politicians (or rather the "moderates" among them), equality seemed to mean complete cultural and nearly complete political autonomy for Quebec, plus a French-English parity, or something close to it, in running the country as a whole.

In short, a two-nations concept in a new federal structure similar to the old Austro-Hungarian model.

In practice this would have meant that while Canada could retain the administrative division into 10 provinces, in the federal decision-making process, Quebec would assume the same weight as the rest of the country, regardless of the size of its population.

What Quebec really wanted, and what the teetering Pearson government kept hidden from the increasingly bewildered public in the English-speaking provinces, thus amounted to federal dualism with an autonomous francophone state, all firmly entrenched in an entirely new constitution.

While this concept was being gradually elaborated by the successive Liberal and Union Nationale governments in Quebec City, outright separatism was gaining ground and forcing the "moderates" to jack up their price for keeping the "equal partnership" concept alive. The late Quebec premier, Daniel Johnson, put the emerging two-tier blackmail in a nutshell in his "equality of independence" slogan.

Conscious of the political storm disclosure of the gravity of the situation would unleash, the Pearson regime tried to temporize and buy time for some diplomatic muddling through. It devised various "opting-out" formulas for the Quebec autonomists and initiated an unrealistic bilingual program.

By the time Pearson stepped down, the public had an inkling — as a result of John Robarts' conference — that constitutional issues would play a big, perhaps the decisive, role in the handling of the steadily worsening Quebec crisis. This, no doubt, became a major factor in the selection of Quebec federalist Pierre Trudeau as Pearson's successor.

Seen in retrospect, it's quite possible that Trudeaumania was, at least in part, a subconscious expression of the hope of a large number of English-speaking voters that in Trudeau, Quebec may have produced the savior of national unity.

Many Quebec voters, on the other hand, may have seen him, perhaps also unconsciously, as the man who will put Quebec in the driver's seat in Ottawa.

For almost nine years Trudeau managed to play everybody's hero and bluff his way through the contradictory expectations his regime has generated, fostered and played one against the other. The bluff was called last month when Quebecers voted implacable separatists in power, apparently convinced that Trudeau's constitutional rigidity killed all remaining chances of some acceptable accommodation within an entirely new and different federal framework.

So how we got to the breaking point is fairly obvious from the record. And anyone willing to face hefty doses of unvarnished, perhaps shocking truth shouldn't have much difficulty figuring out why it happened.

Some uncommon quotations

By RICHARD JACKSON

You think Parliament Hill is Dullsville?

That the House of Commons is but an ornate political wind tunnel?

Then run an eye down the following list of uncommon quotations taken from the word-by-word text of some of the things your elected representatives have been saying, as sifted from the pages of Hansard.

First consider, in the context of the present political plight of the country, and his sworn mission nine years ago, of national unification, these words of Prime Minister Trudeau.

They were borrowed by the prime minister from the recorded wisdom of a political authority eight centuries ago:

★ ★ ★

"The people put a man in authority to rule justly, rendering to each his due; and if then, this man breaks the contract according to the terms whereby he was chosen, thus creating disorder in the hearts of those things he was supposed to put in order, reason and justice require that the people should be released from their obligation to follow him in his leading."

Seems clear, doesn't it? And Pierre Trudeau himself put it on record as holding as true today as it did back in the Eleventh Century.

★ ★ ★

Great Contributions to the Never - Use - One - Word - When One - Paragraph - Will - Do department:

External Affairs Minister Don Jamieson: "There is a short, one word answer with regard to the substance of the question the Honorable Member asked of me, and it is this: I had no awareness of the matter at issue and the matter, as far as I know, is being cleared up by the appearance before the Standing Committee of the House of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Supply and Services. So there is nothing I can add to that except to say that once again I have to say that in answering the question I would be going against the ruling of the chair, according to which I cannot be asked questions in this matter."

Clear? And now you know what "one short word" sounds like.

Promising Parliamentary Careers Blighted by Over-Exposure to the Blinding Light of Impulsive Honesty:

John M. Reid, 12-year Liberal MP for the Ontario riding of Kenora-Rainy River: "I take no responsibility for answering those questions from the Opposition. My duty is only to report them. I suggest the Honorable Members take up their quarrel (of non-answers) with the relevant ministers of the cabinet who are obviously not doing their work and job properly."

★ ★ ★

Oh, oh. Honest John Reid, not long ago a parliamentary secretary in training for a cabinet appointment has been banished to the back benches.

Unforgettable Political Protestations of Our Time:

Former Finance, Industry Trade and Commerce, External Affairs Minister, Government House Leader and 15-year veteran of Parliament Mitchell Sharp: "We are deeply dedicated and determined to be above and beyond any and all suspicion in raising our party campaign funds."

So there.

The Pierre Trudeau You Never Dreamed Could Be So Ungallant:

Mr. Trudeau: "I hear the Honorable Lady over there (Flora MacDonald, Conservative MP for Kingston-The Islands) snorting and making strange noises."

An Hon. Member: "Oh, oh!"

An Hon. Member: "Shame; Pierre how could you?"

An Hon. Member: (Obviously a Liberal) "She does it all the time. I know, I listen."

An Hon. Member: "That's not nice of you, Pierre."

Strange noises? What other sounds than your ordinary everyday political honk of derision?

★ ★ ★

Great Parliamentary Truths of Our Time:

Joseph Guy, Liberal MP for the Manitoba riding of St. Boniface and minister without portfolio: "Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege is that I wish to abide by the rules of this House."

An Hon. Member: (Clearly a Conservative) "Then shut up and sit down."

And Joe Guy did.

Great Policy Statements from The Man Himself:

Mr. Trudeau: "There is no specific proposal that I find myself in a position to put before the House at this time."

That's leadership, what?

Washington Calling

End of the stalemate

By MARQUIS CHILDS

President-elect Jimmy Carter has assembled a first-rate administration. This is obvious even to one who has been out of touch with the day-to-day news on a brief vacation in the warm sun of southern Mexico.

Fault-finding with individual choices, such as that of Griffin Bell to be attorney-general, was to be expected, but surely a president is entitled to have a close associate out of the past in that most sensitive of offices.

This was true when President John F. Kennedy named his brother, Robert, to that post and thereby drew down a loud outcry. But Robert Kennedy, standing up against the pressures of J. Edgar Hoover and the other conflicting forces in the Department of Justice, proved a stern taskmaster. He was a tower of strength for his brother when the catastrophe of the Bay of Pigs broke early in the new president's tenure with hawks in the Pentagon bent on sending bombers over Cuba.

So with the new team in place, and even some of the secondary appointments named, all is in readiness for the starter's signal. It is a momentous beginning for the new president and for the nation.

When Richard Nixon was forced to resign or face impeachment, the glib announcement was that here was proof the system worked. In a limited sense this was true. Nixon's successor, Gerald Ford, proved to be a decent and honorable man confronted with a crisis far beyond his capacities. He was the first president never to have been elected to the office.

But his was a negative presidency with the veto as a continuing weapon turned against the Democratic Congress. As Ford constantly claimed during the campaign, recovery from the recession had begun. It was, however, a faltering recovery with the rise in the rate of unemployment to 8.1 per cent a signal that the decline was far from ended. At the same time the rise in wholesale food prices made any substantial decline in the rate of inflation unlikely if not impossible.

Now with the starter's gun about to sound, there will be a true test of the system. A Democratic president with an overwhelmingly Democratic Congress must demonstrate that constructive steps can be taken to put the jobless back to work without initiating a new spiral of inflation.

What is more, the president is a southerner and his election was a symbol of a party long divided between North and South brought together for the first time since the era of Franklin Roosevelt.

Carter is the first president out of the old Confederacy since 1848. Surely even the troglodytes seemingly set in the concrete of permanent committee chairmanships in Congress will use some restraint in their approach to the Carter program.

But when all this is said, putting the best possible terms on the new presidency, it must be added that on its face the task he confronts is an impossible one. The narrow channel between the Scylla of inflation and the Charybdis of unemployment is beset with treacherous shoals daunting to a far more experienced mariner than Carter.

The optimistic prediction is that the Carter tax-cut plan will reduce unemployment from three-quarters of a point to a full point, bringing the rate down to, say, seven per cent.

But the catch is what this can mean for the rate of inflation. It has been held down at the grim cost of as many as eight million jobless plus an even larger total of those who gave up looking for jobs.

As poll after poll has shown, it is inflation that cuts deepest with the voter who has a job and is comparatively comfortable, if not affluent. The squeeze of higher and higher prices, many in monopoly situations such as telephone rates unlikely to come down in the foreseeable future, is the threat to the Carter administration in the first year or two of a first term when campaign promises are still remembered.

★ ★ ★

Complicating the Carter dilemma is the parlous state of the economy in Western Europe and Japan and the shaky Third World where oil price increases have contributed to a fantastic debt burden. The world looks to Washington for leadership and not only leadership, but direct aid in a ratio that has been steadily falling as we become more and more preoccupied with our own troubles.

Yet for all the hazards ahead the new administration means action and that is profoundly welcome. It means an end of the stalemate. It could even mean the kind of innovation that Jimmy Carter talked about in that long campaign.

So with a new year and a new start there is hope.

Today in History

By The Canadian Press

Henry Howard, the Earl of Surrey, was beheaded in the Tower of London 430 years ago today — in 1547 — at the age of 30. He had been convicted by a prejudiced court of high treason, namely asserting a claim to the heraldic arms of King Edward the Confessor 1042-1066. The underlying reason was political. The Earl of Surrey had said his father, because he was a senior English duke, should be the regent for Prince Edward when Henry VIII died, but Edward's mother was a member of the Seymour family who were Howard's rivals. Henry VIII died Jan. 28 and was succeeded by Edward VI.

1840 — Lieut. Charles Wilkes discovered the Antarctic continent.

1943 — The third daughter of Crown Princess Juliana of The Netherlands was born in an Ottawa hospital.

1962 — Revised immigration rules announced at Ottawa aimed to eliminate discrimination in race, color and creed.

1966 — Indira Gandhi was elected India's first woman prime minister.

1972 — Minutes of the Canadian cabinet war committee and of the full cabinet during the first years of the Second World War were made public.

Gorde Hunter

THE CLICHE HAS been passed down from generation to generation. The constant exposure has left us brainwashed and the veracity is rarely questioned. We are told that crime does not pay.

A fallacy, a falsehood, because there are far too many examples showing that indeed crime is a lucrative business and many grow rich from it and stay relatively clear of any meaningful payment for their crimes.

Now we have irrefutable proof because the attorney-general of our province, Garde Gardom, announced the crown would be dropping a substantial number of summary conviction cases to help clear the heavy backlog of cases facing the courts. These would be cases that, for one reason or another, have dragged on for six months without disposition.

THE HUE AND CRY should have been predictable. Gardom would have been a fool to believe otherwise. Police Chief Jack Gregory attacked the plan as did the former attorney-general, Alex Macdonald.

There can be little or no reasonable doubt the court system in British Columbia is weathered by excessive crime and tethered by lack of court space, judges and prosecuting staffs. It is an antiquated system and the blame lies all the way from A to Z.

When Macdonald was the attorney-general, it was pointed out he could be doing a lot more for the province by expending the same amount of energy he used on attempting to legalize the sale of beer in grocery stores, on straightening out the mess in the courts.

ON DIFFERENT occasions this column asked Macdonald to institute reforms that would cut down the interminable delays experienced in the courts.

Like the deplorable waste of time and money when a citizen appears to answer a charge. He is asked how he pleads — guilty or not guilty? He replies he would like a week to think it over — request granted. Why? It's a simple question, no delays should be granted and for this, blame the judiciary.

He comes back a week later and offers a plea of not guilty. He is then asked whether he wants a trial by judge or trial by judge and jury. He'd like to think that one over for a week, too. Oh yes, it is not uncommon for his lawyer to tell him that he'll be able to stretch out the case for many months, if necessary.

THE ACCUSED should be apprised of what he has to do on his very first appearance. He must make his plea, he must decide on the system of justice desired — none of this two, three and four weeks to make decisions that wouldn't tax a 10-year-old.

The law profession must accept much of the blame because they flout the rules of the game as much as the accused. Indeed, they often counsel their clients to play the waiting game. I know of one case, an auto accident causing death, which dragged on for the better part of nine months. It should have been cleared up in one month or less. The remands granted make a pure mockery of justice. The system not only gives them every chance of proving their innocence, it gives them the upper hand.

UNDER THE GARDOM PLAN, many accused of impaired driving, of breaking and entering, will go scot free because of what amounts to a statute of limitations.

Gardom is wrong, his government is wrong. It is bad legislation and should be condemned and fought.

Gardom should be channeling his efforts in an entirely different direction. He should be forcing a change in the court system and any denials as to the possibility of speeding up proceedings would be cop-outs on his part.

It has been pointed out before — our government still has much unused office space in this city and in Vancouver. Put that paid-for space to work by creating temporary courts.

THEY WOULD BE spartan, utilitarian — no need for fancy trappings. Fold-down chairs would suffice, two or three tables and let's cut into the backlog.

Hire enough temporary judges and prosecuting crews to do the job. They can't be hired? What a lot of nonsense — just like they said Churchill couldn't possibly get more armament production out of the factories during the war. He more than tripled production through the cutting of red tape. It was essential, he got the job done.

The court mess in British Columbia puts this problem in the same essential class, but the way to do it is extra crew, not by letting possible law breakers off without even so much as a trial.

GARDOM, in announcing his solution, tried to calm the public.

"There is no possibility that people charged with serious crimes are going to get off," he said.

Impaired driving and breaking and entering are serious crimes, whether Gardom thinks so or not.

He is derelict in his sworn duty by even proposing such a cop-out solution and Jack Gregory is right — police departments deserve a better shake. Their work is tough enough, without having that work completely negated because 180 days have passed without the accused being brought to trial.

I expected better from Garde Gardom. We deserve better.

Spy school sore point

Canada-Cuba links take a sour twist

By STEPHEN SCOTT from Ottawa
The Canadian Press

Sweet-and-sour relations with Cuba have gone a bit sour again.

But experience suggests it is nothing to worry about and no major damage is seen to the more imprtant part of the Canada-Cuba links — trade.

The latest sourness is the result the discovery of what apparently was a school for spies destined for southern Africa, operating in Cuba's Montreal consulate. Five Cubans have been ousted.

Apparently the discovery resulted from an investigation that started in 1972 when a bomb blew out part of the 12th floor of the Cuban trade mission, uncovering a spy centre.

The discovery of the school and the bombing are two more spectacular incidents that have dogged Canada-Cuba relations ever since Fidel Castro kicked out Batista in 1959 and declared his government to be Communist.

Various Canadian governments became embroiled in one way or another with problems directly related to Cuba and spatted with Washington over U.S. interference in Canadian trade with the Caribbean country.

Liberal party governments have lived under periodic Progressive Conservative criticism for their Cuban policies although it was Conservative Prime Minister John Diefenbaker who first decided that Canada would maintain normal relations with Cuba and ignore most of U.S. trade embargoes.

Prime Minister Trudeau's visit to Cuba came under fire just a year ago when Cuban troops were fighting in Angola at the side of leftist forces and against forces supported by the U.S. CIA and the Chinese communists.

Trudeau strongly opposed that Cuban action in talks with Castro but also shouted at a giant rally: "Long live Cuba and the Cuban people. Long live Prime Minister Fidel Castro. Long live Cuban-Canadian friendship."

The then Conservative leader, Robert Stanfield, and others said Trudeau should not have gone to Cuba at that time. But the prime minister said that Canada must show its desire for peaceful exchanges with Cuba and "that my visit to Cuba should precede any possible visit of a high level official from the U.S."

The last remark was a reflection of Canadian concerns that U.S. — Cuba relations were thawing, with a chance that Americans would be allowed to trade with Cuba at a cost to Canadian exports.

The warmth of the Trudeau visit was such that the government now is somewhat embarrassed and annoyed at the fact that Cuba apparently was using its Montreal office as a spy school all along.

The Montreal reports say that police who charged into the trade mission following the 1972 bomb explosion found what one former RCMP officer is reported as calling "the Cubans' North American intelligence-gathering centre." The police charged six Cubans with carrying weapons, including sub-machine guns. The charges were dropped by Quebec after Canada apologized for police action against persons and premises that had diplomatic immunity. That was after Castro issued a blistering statement accusing Canadian police of "brutal and fascist methods" and being linked with the CIA. But in a short time there were stories of increased Canadian tourism to Cuba and trade officials chose that year to launch a Cuban export drive. Two years earlier Cuba-Canada relations reached their strongest accord when Cuba agreed to accept the James Cross kidnappers to end the FLQ crisis in Quebec.

Until last year, the U.S. Trading With the Enemy Act and other regulations were used by Washington to try to stop trade with Cuba by Canadian subsidiaries of U.S. companies.

Included were the sales in 1974 of 30 locomotives by MLW-Worthington of Montreal and office furniture by Litton Industries.

◆ ◆ ◆

Washington allowed the locomotives and office furniture to go through only after notes from Canada about interference with Canadian internal affairs.

Cuba is Canada's third most important trading partner in Latin America, after Venezuela and Brazil. Business started booming in 1974 when world sugar prices and good economic management put Cuba in a comfortable economic position.

Sugar prices have dropped drastically but the country still is regarded as a valuable customer.

In the past the government has made a $100 million line of credit available to Cuba, an indication of Canadian faith.

Heritage proposal

All About Us and Heritage Canada invite the people of Victoria, and especially the students, to join the Great Canadian Heritage Hunt.

February 21, 1977 is Heritage Day across Canada, a day to appreciate the surviving accomplishments of earlier community builders, and to talk with the people who were young when our country was young.

Each community has its own heritage visible in the buildings, craftsmanship, customs and values of older times. These treasures can be discovered, particularly if our young people will lend their considerable energies to the search. We invite school-age Canadians to record their findings in original drawings, paintings, stories, poetry and interviews, and send them to All About Us. They will be published and exhibited across Canada.

All About Us and Heritage Canada are both non-government, non-profit organizations working together to encourage the appreciation of Canada's heritage, and the conservation of the best of our built and natural environment.

Please send materials about your community's heritage or write for an information kit to All About Us, Box 1985, Ottawa, Ontario, K1P 5R5. We want to discover how our young people view their country, for it is they who will carry the good things of the past and present into the future.

Heritage Day is a time when people of all ages can share in appreciating their own heritage. Join the celebration.

Firemen

Fire the firemen if they strike! The first obligation of our city's government is to provide essential services and to protect the property of the people who pay the wages of all municipal employees. Ask the armed services to lend us some of their people who have had training for fire fighting. Employ and train people now unemployed who would appreciate even half of the $16,000 or more which firemen receive. Then get laws passed outlawing strikes in any essential service or industry. We are being held up and held hostage by those we pay and pension.

Admittedly our country is in bad shape because wage earners are more greedy and more powerful, but it is incredible that people hired, trained and paid by our tax money would let fires burn out of control. Would they let Victoria burn down as Chicago did in the previous century? Would it be like this:

"It doesn't look like anyone is home at this house, so let it burn."

"Maybe somebody might be overcome by smoke inhalation in there?"

"I doubt it, and it would probably be too late to save him anyway."

"But with this breeze, sparks might ignite the house next door."

"That's what we want, dummy. A lot of real good fires will bring the city crawling to us fast. Besides, the fires probably won't burn more than one city block."

"I hope not — my house is in the next block."

Or downtown—

"Eaton's store is burning! It's a bad one!"

"Well, they can afford it."

"But now it's spreading to other stores."

"Forget it, no lives are in danger tonight."

"But what about all those peoples' jobs?"

"Who cares? There's always UIC and welfare, and the store can be rebuilt in a year or so. Listen, we've got to show those jerks at city hall who's boss. We gotta get those few extra bucks."

"But will they rebuild if they can't be sure of fire protection?"

"That's their problem; our jobs are safe — that's all that counts. Wait 'til next year. We'll really sock it to 'em them if we win this one!"

Council, and citizens of Victoria: You must not give in or even permit such a possibility again. This is the prayer of one whose income has risen three per cent per year since 1970.

Seal hunt

There is no shortage of emotion and propaganda concerning the East Coast seal hunt. Here are some facts:

If the annual hunt were ended:

The multiplying herds of seals owuld have to be controlled by the government.

Fishermen would lose a valuable part of their meagre annual income.

Seals eat vast amounts of fish, therefore much of the northeast coast fishery would be threatened.

Also, those self righteous, meat-eating, leather-wearing hypocrites who oppose the seal hunt should be informed that seal meat is a source of food (a delicacy, in fact) for thousands of people.

Bilking

Bravo Mayor Young!

Although why you wish to insult the welfare bum by your comparison is beyond me. At least in my opinion, a welfare bum has some character and compassion and has only one means of bilking the people of the province, where the provincial government has all the advantages such as ICBC, B.C. Ferries and B.C. Hydro.

If there were such a thing as awards for accomplished liars it wouldn't be hard to figure out who would get first prize. I wonder how much longer the people of this province are going to be taken in by that well worn, thinly disguised excuse of blaming it on the NDP.

Curb the unions, says reader

One wonders under what premise labor leaders base annual wage demands and additional fringe benefits; aside from the usual, inept, private-public sector roun-de-lay, as the "work farce" produces less and sloppier work.

In fact, the "poor" Canadian worker is apparently making such high wages, that their national absenteeism record surpasses the millions of man hours lost annually in strikes. No wonder Canadian goods can't compete internationally.

In British Columbia, thanks to NDP generosity, we have outrageous wages paid in both public and private sectors, including crown corporations; a B.C. Teachers' Federation so busy manipulating socialist ideology that illiterate students are graduated from classrooms.

It will be interesting to see whether the provincial minister of labor, Allan Williams, vacillates or makes legislative changes in the B.C. labor code that will bring a semblance of order to a province with the worst labor record in Canada. Changes such as: Restricted picketting, right to work, strike voting by secret ballot and under government supervision, open union books, the penalizing of unions refusing services or striking in sympathy; rescind the NDP labor code legislation which permits a 30 per cent employee vote not 51 per cent to unionize, thereby creating financial hardship on small business firms. That piece of pro-labor legislation deleted the word "democratic" from the NDP.

Locally, a new CUPE contract will be negotiated and if firemen or police don't strike sometime during 1977, it is inevitable in the future. Essential service strikes have occurred all across Canada and are indictable under the Canadian criminal code, yet no level of government has ever laid charges, aside from feeble gestures, because government is afraid of the word confrontation.

Most labor unions control by fear. Their terrorist goon squads keep questioning members in line. They are not averse to committing arson, coercion, equipment damage, intimidation, beatings and harrassment behind a cowardly facade of anonymity.

Let us, as Victoria citizens, set an example for other strike-threatened Canadian municipalities, by forming a citizens' protection corps. There are enough retired citizens and armed forces personnel capable of training the corps in basic fire-fighting, the maintenance of law and order whether during a police strike or any strike in which strong-arm tactics are used against the community.

Time has almost reached the point of no return. Anyone wishing to join me who has also "had enough," phone 384-0859. Don't bother me with anonymous, crank calls. At my age I haven't the patience to listen to stupidities. And if there is one, dedicated B.C. lawyer not blinded by dollar signs, I would appreciate it if he or she would get in touch.

Rape article criticized

I wish to point out a few significant facts about the article by Kayce White re the rape prevention program being produced by the police and Rape Relief personnel.

The article emphasizes differences between law officers and Rape Relief workers. It would seem puerile to belabor the obvious differences between the male members of a para-military bureaucracy and the female members of a support service to victims of (primarily male-induced) sexual assault and agression. This fact is one of the fundamentals of the women's movement.

In addition, observe the dialectics of the language used in the article: "Police question the credibility and qualifications of Rape Relief counsellors." "Rape Relief counsellors complain they are not given credit for doing valuable work." Analogy: Men make a point—women bitch.

Further to the issue of the Rape Relief counsellors qualifications: It is stated in the article that one of the police officers quoted has been in police work for 15 years and the other more than 20. Inquiries substantiate that even 15 years ago a completed grade 12 was sufficient qualification for admission to the municipal police forces and grade 11 for the RCMP. Experience is, of course, valuable but must be assessed in qulitative as well as quantitive terms.

The Rape Relief workers, on the other hand, for the most part come from professional academic disciplines augmented by personal working experience evolved from direct contact with the victims of criminal and social abuse. On-going staff training and a constant search for up-to-date information regarding skill-training and relevant innovations in the helping professions regarding the assistance to victims of personal violence are constantly sought and used.

In the interests of all those persons who find themselves in need of advocacy in their dealings with the machinations of all bureaucratic hierarchies, including the legal system, I offer the above comments for consideration.

ISSUE OF

NON-CALLABLE

GOVERNMENT OF CANADA BONDS

DATED FEBRUARY 1, 1977

Bank of Canada is authorized by the Minister of Finance to receive subscriptions for a loan to be issued for cash as follows:

3 year 7½% bonds due February 1, 1980
Issue price: 99.50% yielding about 7.69% to maturity
Interest payable August 1 and February 1
Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000

and

5 year 2 month 7¾% bonds due April 1, 1982
Issue price: 99.50% yielding about 7.87% to maturity
Interest payable April 1 and October 1
Two months' interest payable April 1, 1977
Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000

and

25 year 8¾% bonds due February 1, 2002
Issue price: 99.25% yielding about 8.82% to maturity
Interest payable August 1 and February 1
Denominations: $1,000, $5,000, $25,000, $100,000 and $1,000,000.

It is a condition of the issue of the 8¾% bonds due February 1, 2002 that the Government of Canada will operate a purchase fund. The Government of Canada undertakes to use its best efforts to purchase during each quarter of each calendar year to maturity, when available in the open market at prices not exceeding the original issue price, plus accrued interest, at least ½ of 1% of the principal amount of the 8¾% bonds maturing February 1, 2002. Operation of this purchase fund for the current calendar quarter will commence on February 1, 1977. The Government of Canada may, however, in any quarter of any year apply to this undertaking the purchase of those bonds made during the immediately preceding twelve months and not previously credited. By maturity the maximum amount of this issue which would be required to be purchased by the Government of Canada under these provisions would be 50.5% of the original issue.

Bank of Canada has agreed to acquire a minimum of $500 million of the new bonds, open as to maturity.

Proceeds of the offering will be used for general purposes of the Government of Canada and to redeem $7 million of Government of Canada bonds maturing on February 1, 1977.

The new bonds will be dated February 1, 1977 and will bear interest from that date. Principal and interest are payable in lawful money of Canada. Principal is payable at any Agency of Bank of Canada. Interest is payable without charge at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank. Definitive bonds will be available on February 1, 1977 and thereafter in two forms: bearer form with coupons attached and fully registered form with interest payable by cheque. Bonds of both forms will be in the same denominations and fully interchangeable as to denomination and/or form without charge (subject to Government transfer requirements where applicable).

The new bonds are authorized pursuant to an Act of the Parliament of Canada and both principal and interest are a charge on the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Applications for the new bonds may be made, subject to allotment, through any investment dealer eligible to act as a primary distributor or through any bank in Canada.

Toronto trading

TORONTO (CP) — The Toronto stock market was fractionally lower at the close of moderate trading Tuesday.

Analysts said surging oil and gas issues and a steady climb in mining stocks prevented the five-point loss at New York from causing a sharp drop at Toronto. The Dow Jones index fell 4.82 to 962.43 after United States government reports of a slowdown to 3 per cent in the gross national product.

A total of 256 contractions were traded on the options market, up from 185 Monday.

A 26,600-share block of Kaiser Resources Ltd. at $14½ a share was the largest of the 24 blocks traded.

Bridger Petroleum Ltd. was second with 20,000 shares at $7⅞ a share, followed by 13,000 shares of TransCanada Pipe Lines Ltd. at $12½ a share.

Talcorp Associates Ltd. Class A shares were up 50 cents to $12 a share at the close after a full day of trading that followed a one-day halt.

Brameda Resources Ltd. fell 3 cents to $1.57 after the resumption of trading at the opening. A halt was issued at Monday's opening pending dissemination of news that the company has agreed to sell its 87½ per cent interest in coal licences in northeast British Columbia to BP Canada Ltd. for a total of $30 million.

BP Canada rose ⅛ to 19⅛.

But Argus not too concerned

Rumors hurt Quebec

TORONTO (CP) — John (Bud) McDougald, chairman of Argus Corp. Ltd., said Tuesday rumors about what will happen to Quebec under the separatist Parti Quebecois are having a worse effect than what the party may do with its new powers.

"I don't think Quebec intends to separate," McDougald said in an interview following the annual meeting of common shareholders of Argus, a giant investment holding company which last year earned $11.3 million.

"I don't think they will."

But he admitted that Quebec's new political climate may have created some uncertainties in the market place, although "we have had no indications that it will upset our operations."

"The type of thing we're into really doesn't affect the economics of it."

Argus controls some of the giants in Canadian industry, including Massey-Ferguson Ltd.; Dominion Stores Ltd., and Standard Broadcasting Corp. Ltd.

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque has promised a referendum within two years on whether the province should separate from Canada.

McDougald appeared dismayed about speculation surrounding the outcome of the referendum.

"All these rumors are having far worse effects ... because I don't think Quebec ever will separate.

McDougald told the meeting of about 30 shareholders, representing about 97 per cent of the 1,692,736 common shares, that earnings this year should be about the same as in 1976.

Last year's net income of $11.3 million or $1.16 a share compares with $12,138,000 or $1.25 a share in 1975.

McDougald said the lower profits was due primarily to the $1 million Argus lost in lower dividends from its subsidiary Domtar Ltd.

However, Argus had a capital gain of $8.1 million after selling its holdings in British Columbia Forest Products Ltd.

But with $14 million in the bank in cash and short-term securities, McDougald said Argus has ample cash and no debt. This puts Argus "in a good position to increase its equity holdings when your board considers such purchases prudent."

He said later in the interview that, although "we're very fluid, we have nothing immediately in mind in terms of new investment."

Absent from the 31st annual meeting was Paul Desmarais, president of Power Corp. of Canada Ltd. of Montreal, who had been upset at not being invited to join the board of directors although his company holds both voting and non-voting shares in Argus.

Argus shareholders voted to expand the board of directors to 21 from 16, none from Power Corp.

The new directors are Frederik Eaton, president of Eaton's of Canada Ltd.; Nelson Davis, chairman of N. M. Davis Corp. Ltd.; Trumbull Warren, chairman of Rheem Canada Ltd.; Harry Edmison and James Wright, secretary and treasurer respectively of Argus.

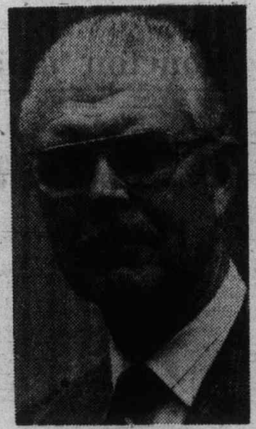
'Another 160 years'

MONTREAL (UPI) — Bank of Montreal Chairman Fred McNeil said Monday the bank is involved in a continuing process of decentralizing its administration but has no plans to move its Montreal headquarters.

"It is almost 160 years since the Bank of Montreal began operations in modest quarters in Montreal," McNeil said. "From small beginnings we have become a major national and international bank. I fully expect that we will still be here 160 years from now."

He said Quebec's election of the pro-independence Parti Quebecois has not affected banking operations in any way.

"Nothing has changed," he said.



President

David Fraser, former president of departed-Bapco Paint Ltd. of Victoria and now general manager for western Canada of Canadian Industries Ltd., has just been elected president of the Vancouver Board of Trade. He left Victoria in 1971.

Regina's boom carries through

REGINA (CP) — Regina's construction boom, which last year established a record $176.9 million in building permits, is carrying through into 1977. Building permits in the first two weeks totaled $3.35 million, compared with $2.04 million for the same period in 1976.

No mass exodus

MONTREAL (CP) — Since the November election of a Parti Quebecois government an increasing number of Quebec businesses are scouting the possibility of moving to other parts of Canada, according to a survey published Tuesday.

However, the cross-Canada survey by The Star suggests that nothing on the scale of a mass business exodus has started.

Inquiries in other provinces by Quebec firms is not a new phenomenon, but industrial development officers in several provinces note that the increasing number of inquiries are being broached in a more urgent fashion.

"The inquiries are now being carred out in a different tone of voice," said Claude Bennett, Ontario industry minister. "The tone is much more, shall we say, deep-rooted."

Inquiries in Ontario from Quebec firms have leapt from an average of 10-12 a week to roughly 35-40 a week, say Ontario officials.

Most of the scouting is being done in Ontario, but British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan are also being investigated by Quebec businessmen.

The size of the firms range from corner dry-cleaning operations to $5 million-a-year manufacturing concerns.

"Just 10 days ago," said Bennett, "I had a man in my office whose employment force is in the hundreds and whose operation is a very sophisticated one."

"People who've been sitting on the fence are more interested now," said Don Duguid, president of the B.C. Development Corporation. Duguid said that the post-election period was a good time for his officials to visit Quebec and make contacts.

In December, B.C. sent a two-man "search" mission into Quebec for talks with chemical, pharmaceutical and textile executives.

Last week the president of the Quebec Industrial Development Corp. said that 1976 figures will show a 12 per cent increase in new plant and expansion investment in Quebec.

Jean Labonte said that half a dozen multinational companies are planning "about $30 million worth of new projects" involving hundreds of jobs in Quebec. He would not name them.

Also last week, the 242-member Quebec Employers' Council released the results of a survey which showed that more than 80 per cent of a sampling of senior executives felt Quebec's business climate was the worst in the country.

Air bags in 1980

WASHINGTON (UPI) — General Motors, Ford and Mercedes-Benz will begin offering American car buyers more than 440,000 cars equipped with air bags beginning three years from now, Transportation Secretary William Coleman said Tuesday.

Volswagen has agreed to install its automatic lock seat belt in another 60,000 cars for sale during the same period, as part of a two-year experiment to determine effectiveness and consumer acceptance of devices designed to give drivers and passengers built-in protection during crashes.

The project, covering the 1980 and 1981 model years, will start one year later than Coleman originally announced last month. He said the automakers cited retooling and design changes in requesting more time.

The price will be $50 for the partial air bag and $100 for the full one, unless an independent audit by the general accounting office shows it should be higher. GM agreed to spend between $5 million and $15 million advertising and promoting the cars, and Ford agreed to spend at least $2 million.

Critics of GM's earlier air bag experiment — which saw less than 10,000 sold — claimed the company charged too much and did little to promote the device.

Three insurance companies — Allstate, Nationwide and VW Insurance — have agreed to offer premium reductions of up to 30 per cent for air bag equipped cars.

FEBRUARY 4TH IS THE LAST DAY TO APPLY FOR YOUR COMMUNITY PROJECT. THEN THE REAL WORK BEGINS.

Canada Works

The restoration of historical buildings, the construction of a fire hall, the replacement of an outdated water system. If you stop and think about it there are probably many good projects that could create jobs and be of great benefit to your community.

This year, a new job creation program called Canada Works will help fight unemployment by providing funds to groups and organizations including private businesses, for worthwhile community projects.

If you have a project that can provide a minimum of five jobs for unemployed people in your area, submit your application to Canada Works.

But do it now. The deadline for applications is February 4th.

Right now, your Canada Manpower Centre has application forms and a Canada Works "Guide to Applicants" that describes the program and how to apply.

Visit your Canada Manpower Centre today.

Young Canada Works

This summer Young Canada Works will help reduce student unemployment by creating jobs in your community. The students will work on projects of community benefit that will enable them to test their career aspirations.

Any established organization can submit an application to Young Canada Works.

Your proposal should provide a minimum of three student jobs for six consecutive weeks. Projects can operate for up to 14 weeks between May and September. Your local CMC has a Young Canada Works "Guide" and application form.

Submit your application now. The deadline for Young Canada Works is February 4th.

BP maps coal plan

VANCOUVER (CP) — British Petroleum estimates it could be exporting about 3 million tons of coal a year from the Sukunka field in northeastern British Columbia by 1985, Ted Best, vice-president exploration and production said Tuesday. However, he added, the company has no firm orders for the field.

Best, speaking in a telephone interview from BP Canada Ltd's Calgary office said the company would spend about $400 million on the development if the federal and provincial governments agree to put in support services such as improved rail lines, port facilities and a townsite.

Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the services would cost about $0 million.

It was announced Monday that BP had agreed to buy the 87.5 per cent interest of Brameda Resources Ltd. in the vast Sukunka field. BP also agreed to buy 20 to 25 coal licences held jointly by Brameda and Teck Corp. in the adjacent Bullmoose and Chamberlain fields. Total sale price will be $30 million.

"If we spend this amount of money we are obviously serious," said Best.

He said that even if government support falls through the company will go ahead with a scaled-down operation and initial capital spending of about $40 million. Under this program the company would begin exporting about 30,000 tons a year in 1979 via the British Columbia Railway and the port of Vancouver.

This program could eventually lead to annual production of 1.5 million tons, said Best.

British Petroleum — one of the world's giant oil companies—is largely controlled by the British government. The Sukunka sale is to BP Canada Ltd and BP Canadaian Holdings Ltd.

BP Holdings Ltd. is a wholly-owned subsidiary of BP which in turn controls 65 per cent of BP Canada. The other 35 per cent of BP Canada is held by the public including many Canadian shareholders.

Norman Keevil, executive vice-president of Teck Corp., said Teck decided to sell its innterest in the Sukunka project because it didn't have the funds available for developing a major coal mine.

Moncton 'aviation nut' buys, sells

Rebuilding fighters big industry

By EDISON STEWART

MONCTON, N.B. (CP) — A Moncton company is deeply involved in rebuilding F-86 Sabre jet aircraft to be used in target practice for surface-to-air missiles used by the United States armed forces.

Officially opened last August, Targetair Ltd. is eventually to provide a total of 55 rebuilt F-86s, bought in 1970 from the Canadian government, to a California company, Flight Systems Inc.

The American company has a contract to supply the U.S. Army with drones — pilotless aircraft guided electronically from the ground. Flight Systems adds more electronic equipment to the jets before they are used.

So far seven of the aircraft have gone through Targetair's newly-built plant here and not one of them has been destroyed yet in numerous U.S. missile tests.

Dave McEwen, president of Targetair, says one drone was blown up electronically from the ground when, after a particularly hard landing, it ran into guidance problems on a subsequent flight.

The history of the Targetair venture, financed partly with the help of the federal department of regional economic expansion, began in 1970 when another of McEwen's companies, Maritime Aircraft Overhaul and Repair Ltd., bought 64 F-86s from the Crown Assets Disposal Corp.

The jets, built in Montreal by Canadiar and used first as fighter and then training aircraft by the Canadian Forces, were being retired.

A few of the jets were sold immediately to private buyers. But for years the remaining jets sat, rusty and in pieces, outdoors in Moncton.

Then, in 1974, McEwen says the U.S. armed forces heard about the aircraft and told him they wanted them for drones. Two of the aircraft, already rebuilt, were taken to the United States for testing. About 18 months later, the U.S. Army returned and wanted to place an order.

Sabres still flying – without pilots

McEwen, a 34-year-old confessed "aviation nut" now for 20 years, says at first he wanted just to sell the jets as they were and retire.

But, he says, the U.S. Army wanted his company to do the job and the Canadian government, interested in providing jobs, wanted also for him to do it.

So he and his 30 employees took on the contract which ends in 4½ years. But he expects Targetair, with or without him, will continue in the business for another 20 or 30 years.

Meanwhile, his other company, Maritime Aircraft and Overhaul, continues to buy parts, serving a market that has included the governments of South Africa, Japan, Pakistan and Italy and a number of private customers.

The latter have included two of the major U.S. aircraft manufacturers, Lockheed and Boeing.

The external affairs department must approve all sales of operational fighter aircraft just to make sure they don't fall into the wrong hands.

But this has not been a problem, says McEwen, "because we know what countries" the Canadian government won't approve and he doesn't deal with them.

Federal answer to special problems

Smaller firms hear of aid

WINNIPEG (CP) — Small businesses are to receive a large share of federal incentive money under the enterprise development program, minister of state for small business Len Marchand said Monday.

"The lion's share has gone to large business before," Marchand told a news conference.

"There's nothing wrong with big, we're not after the big guys, it's just that small businesses have special problems and we want to give special attention to them."

Marchand was in Winnipeg for a one-day meeting with members of the business community and officials of the provincial government designed to ensure federal programs do not overlap provincial ones.

He said the government hopes to get more mileage out of its incentive grants by redirecting the money to production-orientated small businesses. The incentives could help alleviate Canada's unemployment situation.

In the past, he added, the bulk of the money has gone to bigger companies which have used it for innovations in technology and machinery and for research.

Administration of the new program will be decentralized in regional offices throughout the country.

Marchand said the Business Development Bank is intended to be a kind of "one-stop shopping centre" for businessmen seeking management advice and loans. Consideration is being given to establishing an advisory council on small business to improve communications between the federal government and business community.

He said he wants to focus special attention on businesses in small centres with the government making more purchases from such outlets.

Jumbo takes off – for repossession

BANGKOK (UPI) — Air Siam became an airline without an aircraft Monday night.

The privately-owned Thai airline's one Boeing 747 jetliner left for Amsterdam, where it will be repossessed by its owners, KLM Dutch Airlines.

Air Siam's cut-rate prices once made the line the most popular route from Bangkok via Hong Kong and Tokyo to the west coast of the U.S.

An airline spokesman said Monday: "This does not mean the end of the airline. We are waiting for a government decision on an extension of our operating licence and we are not laying off employees."

Passengers braved 3 a.m. boarding, over-booking and the lack of amenities aboard the flight for the cheap rates, which often undercut other airlines by as much as $300 from Bangkok to Los Angeles.

More forms

Revenue Canada Taxation has two more forms to assist them, and taxpayers, in compiling their 1976 returns. A spokesman said Monday that one of particular importance is T2200, a declaration of conditions of employment as it applies to expense claims.

Those who travel on behalf of a firm on a regular basis and who pay their own expenses, must now annually get the required form and have it signed by their employer, in order to claim certain expenses as a deduction.

Those who qualify for a disability deduction must also, for the first time only, obtain a form that is to be signed by the individual's doctor.

PROVINCIAL COURT

Two Saanich teenagers facing six charges, including armed robbery, kidnapping and unlawful confinement, have been remanded until Thursday to fix a date for a preliminary hearing.

Harold Einar Hemstad, 19, of 649 Baxter, and Michael Allan Rhodes, 17, of 576 Margaret, elected trial by judge and jury Tuesday in Victoria provincial court.

They are jointly charged with the Jan. 11 holdup of the Royal Bank of Canada branch at 2973 Tillicum in Saanich, kidnapping and unlawfully confining 26-year-old George Carroll of 200 Dallas Road in Victoria and stealing his car, possession of stolen money and handgun at Vancouver International Airport Jan. 15, and theft of the gun from Robinson's Sporting Goods, 1307 Broad Street, on Jan. 7.

Bail was denied Rhodes after a hearing before Judge William Ostler, who also refused bail for Hemstad on Monday.

A 19-year-old from Lethbridge maintained his guilty plea on a charge of indecent assault and was remanded to Friday for sentence.

Leslie Peter George Sackman appeared before Ostler on Monday and pleaded guilty to indecently assaulting a 23-year-old cousin whom he came to visit on Jan. 10.

But after Sackman explained that he pleaded guilty to save the court time and trouble and because the victim was a relative, Ostler refused to accept the plea and remanded him until Tuesday for a bail hearing.

Sackman was adamant Tuesday, and Ostler did not question the plea.

□

Robert Stewart Mitchell, 30, charged with the Jan. 11 forcible confinement of a 16-year-old girl, was remanded until Friday to continue his bail hearing and to set a preliminary trial date.

Mitchell, a member of the Canadian armed forces, elected trial by judge without jury and a bail hearing began Tuesday.

□

A 17-year-old Victoria youth pleaded guilty to breaking and entering with intent to commit an indictable offence and was remanded until Jan. 26 for sentencing.

Norman Lawrence Mitchell, of 713 Pembroke, pleaded guilty to breaking into Blanshard elementary school Jan. 14.

Court was told that Mitchell, with two other juveniles, forced a window and, once inside, went through the classrooms. Victoria city police, responding to an alarm, caught the three youths in and near the school, Mulligan said.

Ostler changed his mind and placed a 19-year-old on a year's probation after handing out a suspended sentence for breaking and entering, and theft.

"He's already on two probations. What's the use of giving him another probation?" Ostler asked defence lawyer Roger Cardinal, who argued against a pre-sentence report's recommendation for incarceration.

However, Cardinal convinced the judge and George Hamilton August, 19, of 2136 Ridge Road, was handed the suspended sentence, probation and 80 hours of community service work after pleading guilty to breaking into the Cordon Bleu Restaurant, 820 Esquimalt Road, on Dec. 22.

Ostler noted that law enforcement officials were getting "fed up with these probations."

"If you don't take advantage of it this time," Ostler told August, "so far as I'm concerned, I can't give you any more consideration."

□

A 48-year-old man was brought into court handcuffed and escorted by two Victoria city police officers after he was heard screaming shortly before court started Tuesday.

Richard Harvey Moore, address unknown, was appearing for plea on charges of possession of marijuana and hashish, but was arrested prior to his appearance on a warrant of committal for default of payment of a fine.

"They (police) jumped me and assaulted me when I was trying to come to court," Moore told Ostler.

Moore appealed to Ostler to have the crow nproceed by indictment instead of summary conviction so that he could be eligible for legal aid, but was refused.

"The only chance I've got is to get in front of a jury," Moore continued.

Moore refused to enter into a new undertaking to appear because he said it would jeopardize his position in connection with an undertaking he had already signed.

At that point, Ostler remanded Moore until Jan. 25 for plea and to give him another opportunity to get legal counsel.

'Keep Oak Bay grocery stores'

Condominium push brings plea

There were no formal protests at an Oak Bay public hearing this week on land-use contracts to permit two luxury condominium projects in Oak Bay — just a plea from two elderly women that council try to maintain local grocery stores in the community.

Mrs. H. J. Davis of 2-1370 Beach, said Morgan's Grocery at 1175 Newport was the only general-service store available to many people at the lower end of Oak Bay, and its loss by demolition to make way for the condominium would make life more difficult for them.

"We're losing the village atmosphere," she said.

Mayor Brian Smith agreed that the loss of small stores in Oak Bay was "alarming" but there was nothing council could do.

Ald. John Goult said zoning in Oak Bay hadn't reached the stage of telling people they had to put a bakery here or a grocery there, and added the possibility of putting stores in the basement of the project had been discussed with the developers.

"Unfortunately, it would be uneconomic for a service store. They would have to be restaurants or boutiques to be able to afford the rents," he said.

Eventually, the idea was dropped by council and the developer, Wheaton Development Corp., which proposes a five-storey, 20-unit condominium on the site.

The bylaw got three readings, as did another for a four-storey, 10-unit condominium on the southwest corner of Newport and Transit. This project is by Henderson Realty Ltd., and the units will sell for around $200,000 each.

Also receiving all but final approval was a bylaw to permit not more than two doctors or dentists to maintain a partnership in any dwelling in a single-family residence zone.

Bennett scoffs at separatism

Premier Bennett denied Tuesday that his government was holding talks with any organization regarding western separation from the rest of Canada.

But he refused to openly criticize Human Resources Minister William Vander Zalm for personal statements indicating that he favored a western breakaway.

Bennett made his statement in response to questions by Opposition Leader David Barrett who wanted to know if any cabinet minister supporting separatism would be asked to leave.

"No witchhunt is on in our party," Bennett said. "It may be the way the insecure leadership of your party has to be protected, but there will be no witchhunt here.

"We, as a government, are committed to Canada."

Barrett asked if the premier found it "an anomaly to support Confederation so strongly . . . how can you tolerate the opposite?"

Bennett dismissed Barrett's questions as "frivolous."

During his term of office Barrett offered to transfer jurisdiction of all B.C. oil and natural gas supplies if the federal government would nationalize the industry across the country.

He replied to Bennett: "If you are asking me as a Canadian whether our natural resources should belong to Canadians or big oil cartels, then the answer is easy — they should belong to Canadians."

Outside the House, Barrett said he still couldn't understand how the premier, apparently solidly in favor of Confederation, could tolerate in his cabinet a minister obviously in favor of separatism.

School board sets management body

The makeup of the Greater Victoria School Board's management committee for the next six months has been determined by the board.

The committee will consist of board chairman Susan Brice, trustees Peter Bunn and Lavinia Greenwood, superintendent Allan Staples, and assistant superintendent John Wiens.

The only regular members of the committee will be the board chairman and the superintendent. The other members may change, and Mrs. Brice has indicated that the trustee members will rotate every six months.

The committee's main function will be to screen items for board meetings. The board will move to two regular meetings each month, and committee work will be done by ad hoc committees.

Rockies tied for third spot in Smythe Division scramble

Colorado Rockies cannot realistically hope for anything better this season than a Stanley Cup playoff spot, but having a shot at that makes them one of the most improved clubs in the National Hockey League although the chance is there only because they are in the Smythe Division.

Playing as the Kansas City Scouts last season, the Rockies finished 36 points out of third place and 45 points behind the second-place Vancouver Canucks. Now, 45 games into the 80-game schedule, the Rockies are tied for third place with the Canucks and Minnesota North Stars and only nine points behind the second-place Chicago Black Hawks.

But it should have been third place to themselves and seven points away from the runner-up team. The Rockies had the Hawks at 7-3 late in the second period Tuesday night and finally had to settle for a 7-7 stalemate.

It was the fourth meeting of the season for the two clubs, and the Rockies are unbeaten against the defending division champions with two victories and two ties.

Rockies commanded play in the first two periods, firing 33 shots at Tony Esposito. They took 21 shots in a 4-2 first period, and then bounced back to open up a four-goal lead after the Hawks had moved to 3-4 at 8:40 of the second period.

Hawks scored a shorthanded goal at 17:33 of the second period, and then welcomed the change when the Rockies decided to replace goalkeeper Michel Plasse at the start of the third period.

Dick Redmond's second goal of the game came 69 seconds into the period, and Cliff Koroll and Ivan Boldirev brought the Hawks the rest of the way.

In other games Tuesday, Montreal Canadiens continued their inconsistencies by shutting out Washington Capitals 3-0, New York Islanders pounded the North Stars 7-2, and Los Angeles Kings opened a four-game home stand with a 6-3 conquest of Toronto Maple Leafs.

Canadiens, who have gone 6-0, 2-7, 6-0, 3-7 and 3-0 in their last five games, did their defensive thing in Landover. They were outshot, 30-23, by the hard-trying Capitals but there weren't too many real tough ones for Ken Dryden as he chalked up his sixth shutout of the season. Canadiens managed a goal each period, and less than three minutes remained before they got to 3-0.

Bryan Trottier, coming along after a slow start this season, and Andre St. Laurent, who doesn't score often, both had two goals for the Islanders, and St. Laurent also had an assist. Islanders had 45 shots on Gary Smith, and outshot North Stars 22-4 in the last period.

At Los Angeles, six players — including Marcel Dionne — scored for the Kings, who moved to within four points of second-place Pittsburgh Penguins in the Norris Division.

Ian Turnbull scored twice for the Maple Leafs.

Snepsts only Canuck named to all-stars

MONTREAL (CP) — Fred Shero has added eight players, including two Philadelphia Flyers, to complete the Campbell Conference all-star lineup for the 30th annual National Hockey League all-star game in Vancouver Jan. 25, it was announced Tuesday.

The NHL announced that defenceman Tom Bladon and rightwinger Gary Dornhoefer of the Flyers, defenceman Harold Snepsts of Vancouver Canucks and forwards Garry Unger and Phil Esposito of New York Rangers, Wilf Paiement of Colorado Rockies and Tom Lysiak of Atlanta Flames and Tim Young of Minnesota North Stars were all added to the club to augment the 12 players chosen in a poll among members of the Professional Hockey Writers Association.

Scotty Bowman, coach of the Prince of Wales Conference, also added eight players to his roster, including Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles Kings, now second in the NHL's scoring race.

Defenceman Jim Schoenfeld of Buffalo Sabres and Serge Savard of Montreal Canadiens, centres Peter McNab of Boston Bruins and Guy Charron of Washington Capitals, leftwingers Al MacAdam of Cleveland Barons and Nick Libett of Detroit Red Wings and rightwinger Jean Pronovost of Pittsburgh Penguins were added along with Dionne.

Following are the full rosters for both conferences for the all-star game. Should any of the 20 players named to each of the two teams be unable to play in the all-star game, Shero and Bowman must select a replacement from the team of the player unable to participate.

Next game: Tonight — Esquimalt at Fuller Lake.

Saanich Braves moved closer to clinching the South Island Junior "B" Hockey League title Tuesday.

Dale Ewasiuk sc[illegible]tiwce and Ed Beauchemin added his 41st goal of the season as the Braves moved 10 points ahead of Fuller Lake Flyers with 7-2 win over Oak Bay Trios at George Pearkes Arena.

The Braves have five games remaining in league play and the Flyers have seven games left.

Brent Patterson, Jim Story, Wayne Larsen and Murray McLaren also scored for Saanich, which held period leads of 2-0 and 5-1, while Gary Carruthers and Craig Palin scored for Oak Bay.

Paul Vaeson stopped 38 shots in the Oak Bay goal and Mike Duch made 27 saves for Saanich.

Hamilton manages Burrards

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Burrards of the Western Lacrosse Association announced Tuesday that Don Hamilton has become the club's general manager.

Hamilton, 39, who played senior lacrosse for 20 years, retired from active competition at the end of the last season. He replaces Bob Parry.

Hamilton played on the 1957 Mann Cup champion Victoria Shamrocks and was in goal when the Burrards won the Mann Cup in 1961 and 1975.

Canucks call on Gassoff

VANCOUVER (CP) — Left winger Brad Gassoff was recalled Tuesday by Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League for tonight's game here against Pittsburgh Penguins.

Gassoff, 21, had 12 goals and 16 assists in 31 games with Tulsa Oilers of the Central Hockey League. He scored one goal earlier in the season for the Canucks and was sent to Tulsa for conditioning purposes.

Shortstaffed Bays win in tuneup for Classic

Oak Bay Bays experienced a few problems Tuesday as they played their final league game prior to the Oak Leaf Classic Tournament.

The No. 1 ranked team in B.C. only had seven players dressed for the high school boys' basketball encounter with Esquimalt Dockers, but still managed an 88-58 win at Esquimalt.

In other games, Harbindar Sangarah scored a season high 40 points and Spectrum thumped Belmont Braves, 89-55, at Spectrum; Vic High Totems downed visiting Dunsmuir Demons, 96-78; and Reynolds Roadrunners upset the Rams, 61-58, at Mount Douglas.

The Bays hope to extend their No. 1 ranking to include the rest of Canada when they entertain top teams from across the nation this weekend in the first annual Oak Leaf Classic at Oak Bay and the University of Victoria.

With two of the top three teams in Ontario in the Classic the Bays will have to be better prepared than they were Tuesday.

Two starters sat out the game and a third saw limited action.

Ken Kirzinger, a six-foot-six centre, was late for the game and coach Don Horwood kept him on the bench, while Kelly Dukeshire sat out because of an injured finger and Rick Hatchman was used sparingly due to a cold.

Even with the player shortage the powerful Bays had little trouble with the Dockers. Craig Higgins fired in 27 points, Jay Loukes hit for 21 points, Wayne Andrews and Blair Boland scored 12 points each and Tih Tan hit for 10 points.

Barry Kalyn scored 18 points for Esquimalt and Bruce Shotten scored 16 points.

At Spectrum, Sangarah hit from outside and with driving layups increased his average to 27.2 per game, and six-foot-five Dan Ryan dominated the board and scored 26 points.

CFL protects punt returners

EDMONTON (CP) — The rules committee of the Canadian Football League Tuesday introduced stiffer penalties against players called for giving no yards on punt returns.

The committee agreed that the penalty for each infraction now will be 15 yards, compared with the previous 10. The rule was intended to prevent coaches from instructing players to disregard the existing rule because a 10-yard penalty is much less costly than a lengthy runback.

Several housekeeping adjustments were made and the committee also moved to protect punt returners by introducing a penalty of 15 or 25 yards — instead of the current 10 — when a player preparing to field a punt is touched by a member of the punting team.

The committee also ruled that the ball becomes dead on a blocked convert attempt, preventing a possible two-point play on a run or a pass. In addition, it was determined that a team offside on a kick-off will be penalized five yards instead of 10 as at present.

The committee called for enforcement of the rule that says an injured player must leave the field if time out has been called to treat his injury.

A proposal to have all kick-offs made from the 40-yard line instead of from the 45 following touchdowns and 35 following field goals was voted down, along with a Montreal Alouettes proposal to allow a fair catch on punts.

The committee was asked to consider having six officials instead of the current five but said it was a monetary matter that fell outside the jurisdiction of the committee.

Coaches will be asked at a noon news conference today to express their opinions of the rules committee's judgment. The news conference and the Tuesday meeting are held in conjunction with the annual coach-of-the-year dinner here tonight.

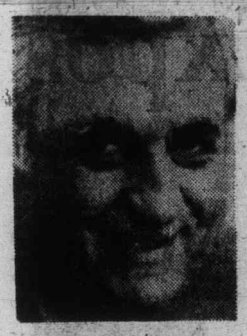
WHA will include international games



Hatskin

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Minnesota Fighting Saints have been given their final reprieve by the World Hockey Association's board of trustees.

Minnesota owner Nick Mileti has until 8 p.m. PST, Thursday to sell the team or it will be folded, WHA board chairman Ben Hatskin said Tuesday.

In a four-paragraph statement issued under Hatskin's name two hours before the WHA's fifth annual all-star game, the trustees also gave their approval to the controversial seven-player sale made by Minnesota last Friday in an 11th-hour effort to obtain capital.

"All other players will become free agents within the World Hockey Association at 8 p.m. PST Thursday, pending termination of the franchise," the statement said. "Their playing rights in the WHA will be subject to the normal WHA operating regulations.

"A revised schedule has been drafted and will be issued if necessary."

Hatskin also announced that the WHA will include international hockey in its regular schedule for the first time next season, with the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and Finland each playing one game against all WHA teams. The games will count in the standings.

The WHA's plans for next year also include sending the playoff champions, bolstered by six players from their division, to play the European champions in a series on their home ice, probably in November and December.

The league will cut its schedule to 76 games from 80 next season, including the four international games each team will play. There will be 40 home games and 36 on the road.

Hatskin indicated that agreement with the Russians and Czechs had been reached and he expected the Swedes and Finns to follow.

Immediately after the decision approving the Minnesota sale of the seven players, an Edmonton spokesman said the Oilers would keep three players and send four to New England Whalers.

Forwards Dave Keon, Johnny McKenzie, Mike Antonovich, Jack Carlson and Steve Carlson, defenceman Bill Butters and goaltender Louis Levasseur were sold to the Oilers without conditions Friday, but several teams objected and league spokesmen agreed to consider the transaction in detail here.

Keon and McKenzie joined the Carlson brothers in the package shipped to New England by the Oilers. Butters, Antonovich and Levasseur remained Edmonton's property.

Keon and McKenzie said they had no-trade contracts and would not report to the Oilers, whose executive vice-president, Gord Robson, said he had arranged before completing the purchase to send the Carlson brothers to New England. The Whalers also will get a player now on the Edmonton roster in exchange for a New England regular with both players to be named later.

No time limit was agreed for completion of the exchange.

Antonovich and Butters will be in San Diego on Thursday when the Oilers meet San Diego Mariners, a spokesman said. He expected Levasseur to be in San Diego the same day, but it could not be confirmed because Levasseur was preparing to play for the Eastern Division all-stars in the all-star game.

Minnesota had been required to compensate Birmingham Bulls for Levasseur, who was obtained during training camp for future considerations, but Birmingham agreed to withdraw its claim in exchange for future considerations.

Steelhead Society of British Columbia president Barry Thornton has called upon steelheaders in this province to get involved with the $400 million, 15-year Salmonid Enhancement program, or face the demise of steelhead and steelhead angling.

He notes that since the Steelhead Society was organized in 1970 it has concentrated on obtaining recognition of steelhead and steelhead management and on the preservation of steelhead habitat and steelhead angling.

"Never, I am certain, in our wildest dreams did we ever consider the fact that we would have too many fish (The SEP projection is to double current salmon stocks) and of their impact on or sport fishery," he says.

"But, steelheaders, that must be our priority today," he challenges.

"Just on the surface, the implications of the SEP are mind boggling. Rivers with only marginal runs will be choked with salmon. Hatcheries, rearing ponds and artificial channels will be spread along an indefinite number of rivers from Stewart to Sooke — from the Nass River to Little Campbell.

"The commercial industry will have an incredible boost and will prey even more on trophy fish.

"Anglers once counted on two hands in a day's outing will now be shoulder-to-shoulder, as they experience newer fisheries," he laments.

"A negative picture — yes, possibly, but we must make it a positive one," says Thornton.

He notes: "The Salmonid Enhancement Program, regardless of political manipulation will be fact in 1977."

But, he says: "It need not be the demise of steelhead and steelhead angling, but rather its future, a future which is in our power to control, to ensure the indefinite survival of our fish and our sports.

"It alone, and I emphasize this point — is the single most important human act our trophy fish will ever face in this province.

"Only genetic manipulation to create a new river sports fish will have the impact of the Salmonid Enhancement Program on our sport."

Thornton sets out some priorities and guidelines for steelheaders who wish to preserve their sports.

- Strive to ensure river habitats are protected from sheer volume of salmon.
- Strive for saner methods of harvesting these salmon to halt the more than 60 per cent annual kill of trophy trout in the commercial salmon harvest.
- Seek to guarantee forever the genetic purity of steelhead stocks. A Kispiox steelhead is not a Dean steelhead, or a Thompson steelhead, or a Big Qualicum steelhead.

Each has evolved as a race unique to its particular watershed and they must not become extinct, Thornton advises.

- Seek to assure inviolate angler access in perpetuity.

"Never again should we permit an access policy like that on Vancouver Island prior to the early 1970s, which insidiously led to the loss of summer run steelhead and angling on the east coast of Vancouver Island," he warns.

- Strive to preserve and enhance esthetic and biological qualities of riverbank fish and wildlife habitat on rivers.
- Strive for guaranteed river water quality, including protection of spawning gravel and of legislated minimum flows on all water sources with anadromous sports fish.
- Strive for protection of ethics of our sport and yet be willing to assist and promote the evolution of the future's river sports fishery.
- Strive for preservation of all estuaries as unique and highly sensitive environments.
- Strive for recognition of every river as being unique.

"We must not allow a single river, creek or stream to be lost to angling or steelhead-cutthroat production as trade-offs for salmon production, hydro-electric development, channelization for urban protection, or for any other reason," warns Thornton.

"No longer should we accept the incredible absolute restriction of a single fish daily limit. This was a regulation of the past and more than any other was the eventual demise of the sport of steelheading as it had evolved in B.C.

"The absolute minimum we should accept in the future is a two-fish daily limit. Regulations like 10 fish a season, or catch and release, or just one fish a day from a stream, can be imposed during the interim, but no longer should we promote the loss of our sport," says Thornton.

"Above all else we must preserve our options. We must never, like the logger who builds a road into a virgin valley, pre-empt future thinking or future options becase of insensitive tradeoff decisions today."

Thornton calls for a program to promote fish . . . "in our schools, in our colleges, in our communities, with our politicians.

"Fish must be, in the jargon of today, 'the in-thing,' they must be 'neat.'

"For only if we can convince society that they live and breathe, have nurseries and highways, love and die, we will build the public affinity which will guarantee fish protection and enhancement and our survival. It must be axiomatic that fish are the barometer of a healthy environment," he says.

Nordiques spur East to victory

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Real Cloutier of Quebec Nordiques and rookie George Lyle of New England Whalers scored goals 38 seconds apart in the third period Tuesday night to help the East Division beat the West 4-2 in the fifth World Hockey Association all-star game.

It had been 2-1 East when the third period began only because of outstanding goaltending by Lou Levasseur of Edmonton Oilers and John Garrett of Birmingham Bulls.

Willie Lindstrom of Winnipeg Jets tied it 2-2 at 4:07 of the final period, but the East netminders survived a game-record barrage of 51 West shots to give the East its third triumph in the four games played with an East-West format.

Just 3:50 after Lindstrom's goal, Cloutier became the third Nordique to score in the game. Then Lyle, the only rookie in the contest and a hometown favorite, netted the rebound of a shot by New England team-mate Mike Rogers to wrap up the victory.

J. C. Tremblay gave the East a 1-0 lead at 11:17 of the opening period, batting down a pass by Cincinnati Stingers Rich Leduc. The puck at his feet, Tremblay sent a low 15-foot shot past goalie Wayne Rutledge of Houston Aeros.

The West came back to tie it after shots by Lindstrom and Winnipeg team-mate Bobby Hull bounced off the goal post to preserve the East advantage. Only 41 seconds after Tremblay's goal, Levasseur juggled Lindstrom's shot from close range, and Paul Shmyr jammed the rebound into the net.

But Marc Tardif, taking a behind-the-net pass from Quebec team-mate Serge Bernier, sent the East in front again at 14:56. Rutledge got a piece of his shot from the slot but momentum carried it in for a 2-1 East lead.

Lindstrom was selected the outstanding preformer for the West while Levasseur, who played the first half of the game, was the most valuable player for the East before a crowd of 10,337.

Eskimos, Lions narrow choices

EDMONTON (CP) — Operations manager Ray Jauch of Edmonton Eskimos returned to his office Tuesday after a scouting trip to the United States and said he was encouraged at the number of qualified persons interested in the job as head coach of the Western Football Conference team.

Jauch, seeking a replacement for himself as head coach, said in an interview he is reviewing all interested available coaches with Canadian experience.

He declined comment on how many candidates might be in the running for the position, but said Jim Eddy, assistant coach of Saskatchewan Roughriders was among those still being considered. A target date of roughly the end of January or early February was considered for making a decision, he said, "but we're flexible on the date."

Eddy said in a telephone interview he would accept a head coaching position, such as were available in Edmonton and Vancouver, if offered. Otherwise he would remain in Regina.

"I'm happy in Regina," he said. "I've informed the Roughriders I would not accept a lateral job in the Canadian Football League as an assistant."

Bobby Ackles, general manager of the British Columbia Lions, said Eddy was not in the running for the Lions' head coaching position.

"It's not Eddy and it's not Rod Rust . . ." Rust is an assistant with Philadelphia Eagles of the National Football League.

Capitals sign Crozier

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — Veteran National Hockey League goaltender Roger Crozier has been signed by Washington Capitals.

"We want to make the playoffs. That's our whole objective," said Mac McNab, Capitals general manager, in announcing the addition of Crozier. "We'll do anything to realize it. Crozier is a proven guy and we know he can do the job if anything happens to the others."

McNab said he was concerned earlier in the season when goalie Bernie Wolfe was ill.

Crozier, 34, last played in 1975 for Buffalo Sabres. He began workouts Monday with ington Capitals.

Rowdies sign B.C. player

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Tampa Bay Rowdies of the North American Soccer League announced Tuesday the signing of midfielder-forward Wes McLeod.

McLeod, 19, is a member of Canada's World Cup team and played for the Canadian team at the Montreal Olympics. He has been with Vancouver Italia.

Assault trial switched

HAMILTON (CP) — Provincial Judge Ross Bennett ruled Tuesday that goaltender Warren Skinner, charged with common assault in an Ontario Hockey Association Major Junior A playoff game, should be tried in county court.

The judge said the case should be continued under indictment because there was evidence of viciousness in an attack during the game in Hamilton last March 23.

If the case was heard by a county judge and jury, community standards toward hockey violence might be best ascertained, Judge Bennett said.

The judge's ruling turned the provincial court trial into a preliminary hearing for Skinner, who played for Kitchener Rangers at the time.

A Kitchener team-mate, Red Laurence, and Ron Roscoe, a defenceman with the former Hamilton Fincups, also were charged with common assault after the bench-clearing fight. Laurence and Roscoe were to appear in court today.

Constable Ian Langden of Hamilton-Wentworth regional police, who was on special duty at the game, testified that the Kitchener goaltender approached Roscoe from behind, raised his stick and struck the Hamilton player on the head.

After Roscoe fell on the ice, the bench-clearing brawl began, the constable said.

World Cup playoffs still not settled

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Jose Luis Castillo, president of the National Soccer Federation, said Tuesday that soccer official Joaquin Soria Terrazas does not have the authority to award the site of the World Cup zone playoffs.

Soria Terrazas, president of the Regional Soccer Federation for North America, Central America and the Caribbean, awarded Mexico the zone playoffs for the 1978 World Cup to be held in Argentina.

Castillo added: "Soria Terrazas surely influenced the Canadians to decline their aspirations to be the site of the playoffs for the Argentina World Cup."

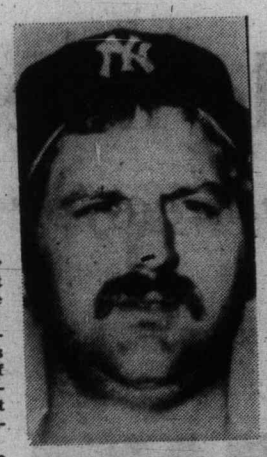
Teams that have qualified for the zone playoffs are Mexico, Canada, Guatemala, El Salvador, Haiti and Surinam.

"We will have to wait for the meeting of the six and it will be at that time precisely when it will be officially established when and where the zone playoffs will be held," Castillo added.

On Monday, the Canadian Soccer Association announced it cannot afford to be host for the playoffs and will support Mexico's bid to stage the round.

Eric King, CSA executive-director, said the decisions were made at a meeting of the association's directors following his inspection last week of the Mexican facilities.

The CSA decided that the $500,000 price tag to be host of the second round would have jeopardized the CSA's developmental programs, King said.



Munson

Munson shocks Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees expressed shock that Thurman Munson, their captain, all-star catcher and the American League's Most Valuable Player, said he may ask to buy his contract or be traded from the American League champions.

"I'm surprised. I don't know anything," said a Yankee spokesman Tuesday. "I can't say anything until I talk to Thurman."

Munson, who batted .302 with 17 home runs and 105 runs batted in during the 1976 season, said Monday night at a dinner in Hamilton, Ont., that the Yankees weren't living up to two verbal agreements. One of the agreements being violated, according to Munson, pertains to the signing by the Yankees of free-agent outfielder Reggie Jackson. The catcher said the Yankees had promised him that he would remain the top-salaried player on the team.

Jackson received a five-year, $2.9 million contract. Munson is currently working on the second year of a three-year contract worth $140,000 a year.

Jarry Park for Expos

MONTREAL (CP) — John McHale, president of Montreal Expos, said Tuesday the National League baseball club will begin selling 1977 season tickets for Jarry Park, the club's home field for its first eight seasons.

"The business of baseball will not allow any further delays in the planning for the opening of the 1977 season," McHale said in a statement, adding that season ticket contracts will be in the mail by the end of this week.

The Expos have been negotiating with the Olympic installation board for the use of the Olympic stadium for the 1977 season, but nothing has been signed.

"The Expos have been advised today by the board that they have not reached a decision on our proposal but will consider further at the end of this month," McHale said.

"Our latest proposal is on the table after nearly a year of continuous negotiations and nothing has been finalized. It is regrettable that a lease cannot be completed at this time. However we remain hopeful and ready to discuss any new ideas."

McHale would not indicate the major areas of concern although reports have suggested the Expos apparently still want to operate the stadium completely for all activities.

The club was ordered to renegotiate a lease agreement reached with the board, a Quebec government agency which oversees the Olympic facilities, after the Parti Quebecois won the Nov. 15 provincial general election.

Claude Charron, the new minister responsible for sport, said the agreement with the previous Liberal administration was too generous to the club.

Jarry Park has a seating capacity of 28,456 while the Olympic Stadium would seat more than 50,000 for baseball.

Meanwhile, Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League have still not signed a deal for their use of the Olympic facility for the 1977 season.

However Alouettes' owner Sam Berger and his son David met with Charron and other cabinet officials Monday and while no negotiating was done, apparently everybody came away happy.

The Alouettes, who would have 10 home dates this season in the stadium if they reach an agreement with the board, played four CFL games in the stadium last year, drawing 65,505 for their first appearance last Sept. 26.

The Expos begin their 81-game home schedule April 15 against Philadelphia Phillies, last year's East Division champions.

NBA deal

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Golden State Warriors have traded backup centre George Johnson to Buffalo Braves for a 1977 first-round draft choice, the National Basketball Association team announced Tuesday.

Johnson, six-foot-11 and 220 pounds, is in his fourth year with the Warriors. Playing behind Clifford Ray.

Everton held to draw

LONDON (Reuter) — Second Division Bolton moved closer to Wembley and the English Football League Cup final with a 1-1 tie at Everton in the first leg of the semi-final soccer series Tuesday.

Everton brought the crowd of 54,000 to its feet when Duncan McKenzie, recently back from playing in Belgium for Anderlecht, headed the club into the lead 12 minutes before the half.

But Bolton had the better of the second half and with two minutes to go, eNil Whatmore scored the tying goal after Everton goalkeeper David Lawson was penalized for carrying the ball more than four steps.

The tie gave Bolton the edge because of the home game in the next leg.

Meanwhile, Trevor Francis of Birmingham and Malcolm Macdonald of Arsenal each scored three goals in a 3-3 draw between the First Division rivals.

The 50¢ Lunch

Scrambled Heroes!

Another quick'n thrifty lunchtime treat with eggs

1 loaf French bread, 14" long (OR 2 loaves, 7" long)
2 tbsp. oil
1 small green pepper
1 medium onion
6 eggs
½ tsp. salt

Cut bread into four equal pieces. Slice each piece in half so that slices remain hinged. Place uncovered in 325° oven while preparing egg filling.

Heat oil in 10" frying pan. Remove seeds from green pepper and cut into pieces 1" x ½". Slice onion into thin rings. When oil is moderately hot, add vegetables. Cook, stirring constantly, until tender and faintly brown.

Remove frying pan from heat. Beat eggs and salt in small bowl. Pour over vegetables in frying pan and return to heat. Stir eggs so uncooked portion runs to bottom of pan. Result should be between omelette and scrambled eggs.

Divide filling between four pieces of bread. Serve at once. Makes 4 sandwiches.

You'll love what you can do with eggs—and what eggs will do for your budget! For 4-dozen more great-tasting mealtime ideas, send 50¢ with your name and address to:

Downhill star suffers injury

SCHRUNS, Austria (AP) — Switzerland's Bernadette Zurbriggen won the one-day delayed World Cup women's downhill ski race Tuesday as favorite Annemarie Moser-Proell of Austria had a spectacular fall.

Zurbriggen's time of one minute, 23.49 seconds gave her a .36 seconds triumph over Evi Mittermaier of West Germany.

Moser-Proell, who leads in the over-all World Cup point standings, veered off the trail into a pile of snow and was unable to get up for several minutes. She suffered a sprained shoulder, an injury far less serious than first imagined.

Third place went to Marie-Theres Nadig of Switzerland with a time of 1:23.95, followed by Austrians Brigitte Haberstatter-Totschnig, 1:24.24, and Nicola Spiess, 1:24.43.

West Germany's Irene Eppel was sixth at 1:24.45, followed by Martina Ellmer of Austria, 1:24.50; Marlies Oberholzer, Switzerland, 1:24.52; Hanni Wenzel, Liechtenstein, 1:24.57 and Elena Matous of Iran, 1:24.63.

No Canadians were listed among the 46 racers who were listed as finishing the 2215-metre course with a vertical drop of 53 metres.

Pakistan tops Aussies

SYDNEY (Reuter) — Pakistan required only 60 minutes to complete the humiliation of Australia in the third and final cricket test and so gain their first ever test victory in Australia.

The Australians were all out without adding to their overnight total of 180 for nine and this left Pakistan an easy target of 32. They cruised to an eight-wicket victory, losing the wickets of Sadiq Mohammad and Zaheer Abbas, with two and a half days to spare.

Pakistan's win, its first over Australia in 20 years, levelled the series at one each, with one match drawn.

All-rounder Imran Khan, the man of the match, fittingly captured the last Australian wicket with his seventh ball to take six wickets in each innings for match figures of 12 for 165.

England nears victory

MADRAS, India (Reuter) — Left-arm spinner Derek Underwood, finding a successful streak in the final overs of the day, left England firmly placed for victory over India in the third cricket test, and for an unbeatable 3-0 lead in the five-match series Tuesday.

Underwood took three wickets in 10 balls without conceding a run to leave India with virtually no hope of saving either the match or the series. Earlier in the day, England declared its second innings at 185 for nine.

With one day's play left, India is 45 for three after being set 284 to win.

NFL veterans honored

SEATTLE (AP) — Running backs Gale Sayers of Chicago Bears and Frank Gifford of New York Giants, quarterback Bart Starr and lineman Forrest Gregg of Green Bay Packers and Bill Willis of Cleveland Browns have been named to the U.S. Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Willis, an offensive and defensive guard from 1946 to 1953 with the Browns, was selected as a member of the pre-1952 era.

Sayers, Gifford, Starr and Gregg were selected as modern-era stars, and all were elected in their first year of eligibility following the mandatory five-year waiting period after retirement.

Barnes ordered to jail

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Basketball star Marvin Barnes of Detroit Pistons has been ordered to serve one year in prison for violating the terms of a probationary sentence imposed for assaulting a Providence College team-mate.

Judge Anthony Giannini rejected Barnes's appeal for a work-release alternative under which he would have helped underprivileged youths either here or in Detroit instead of going to prison.

Giannini said the former All-American was not "a model to be judged by the young and impressionable."

The judge said it would be acceptable to postpone the start of the sentence until after the current National Basketball Association season ends.

White
. . . looks for answers

White enjoys early success

CHICAGO (AP) — Coach Bill White, who has Chicago Black Hawks playing better these days, considers himself "more or less permanent until I'm told I'm being replaced."

"Of course," he said, "you have to be realistic, because a coach's life is hazardous at best."

White took over as interim coach from Billy Reay a little less than a month ago and after his first 11 games the Hawks had a 6-4-1 record, a far better clip than the 10-20-5 record they had under Reay.

Currently, they are in second place in the weak Smythe Division and should have little difficulty making the playoffs.

However, in practically every other division they would have trouble and in the powerful Patrick Division they wouldn't even be close to last place New York Rangers who have 46 points.

White is trying to change all of that but admits it is too early for him as a coach to determine what has to be done.

"You just can't go out and shop for players," he said. "I try to point out mistakes between periods. I speak to the whole group and I don't mind telling a player that he could have done better or that he did not do what he was supposed to do.

"Coaching is like anything else. You can demand excellence and expect it, but then you have to be realistic and know your personnel. It's true that we have been flat at times and at other times we've looked super. What the answer to this inconsistency is, I don't know."

Among White's problems are Bobby Orr's questionable knee and the recent loss of defenceman Keith Magnuson who is probably out for the season. Magnus underwent surgery Monday for a snapped Achilles tendon.

"The loss of Magnuson really hurts," said White, "because he was the guy who gave our team a lift. He was always encouraging others to do a better job."

General manager Tommy Ivan appears satisfied with White, who had been sidelined with cervical nerve damage and may never play again.

"I am pleased with the job White is doing," said Ivan. "I think there is a general feeling that the players want him to look good and, of course, they want to improve their position in the race. It is far too early to make an assessment of White but I believe that the attitude of some of the players is better than before.

THE TOYOTA CANADIAN ...A SMART IDEA FOR THIS COUNTRY.

For years now, Toyota has been coming to Canada to test its cars. Tests in the far north at temperatures of -40° fahrenheit, cold weather starting and driving, heater capacities, windshield defrosting action, electrical systems, extreme winter driving and handling tests and overall mechanical component performance. Plus tests in Canadian cities for corrosion and humidity problems, and extensive winter stop and go driving.

EQUIPPED FOR CANADA.

With the knowledge gained over these years of research Toyota proudly announces a special automobile...one that's built to take on the worst weather this country can dish out. And win.

The Toyota Canadian comes with a gutsy 1200 cc proven engine, a heavy duty battery, power front disc brakes, a powerful electric rear window defroster, side window defoggers, MacPherson strut front suspension, a heavy duty heater, 4-speed fully synchronized transmission and styled steel wheels.

The Toyota Canadian uses some very advanced rust inhibitors including plastic front fender liners, zinc coated rocker panels, corrosion and dampness resistant engine fittings...to name but a few.

The Toyota Canadian is rated at an estimated 51 miles per gallon on the highway, 33 in the city, based on TRANSPORT CANADA approved test methods. Of course, the actual mileage you get will vary according to the kind of driving you do and your driving habits.

SERVICED IN CANADA.

Backing the Toyota Canadian are over 230 dealers right across the country and a sophisticated computerized parts system to ensure the immediate availability of virtually any part, anywhere.

PRICED FOR CANADA.

And now the big news. The price for this remarkable automobile is only $3148.00.* That low price makes it the lowest priced popular automobile†...a good reason why you should test drive one soon.

The Toyota Canadian...born out of exhaustive research in this country and now part of the world's number one selling car model line...lives up to its name...terrific!

Chuckling optimistically toward doomsday

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

He looked like someone Central Casting had sent to the wrong movie lot — a sort of intellectual Will Rogers wisecracking his way through a doomsday plot.

The subject was heavy. Diminishing world energy. And there he stood — a man named Boulding from Boulder — white flowing mane, eyes twinkling, a fine wit, confronting the audience with frightening truths one minute and rocking it with laughter the next.

The world could run out of gas in the next 50 years, out of coal 200 years after that. But man has always had a crisis to face — even back in the days when he ate up all the mastodons.

"That, you might say, was a mastodon crisis," Prof. Kenneth Boulding told a University of Victoria audience Monday.

If a man like Boulding wants to treat his subject in a special way and to slip in a joke or two ("What's the Polish energy policy? Same as ours") no one questions him. For the man's record shows he has spent a great many of his 67 years being serious.

Today, as a professor at the University of Colorado (he lives in Bolder, Colo.) he has as his credentials the authorship of more than 20 books and the reputation of being one of the world's most influential economists.

And that doesn't mean he is going to say flattering things about economists.

"Anyone who says you can predict the future is either a liar or an economist," he said to a classroom crowd that included both mature and budding economists.

It was his way of saying that, despite his own reputation, neither he nor anyone else could really answer the question that had been posed by the title of his lecture: Are We Running Out of Energy?

His own answer was a sort of qualified "maybe," with the added explanation of a born optimist.

While he admits the days of most sources of energy are numbered, he likes to point out that increases in knowledge have always come along in time to end predicaments. He feels creativity is the answer and must be encouraged somehow.

Part of his confidence in the future is because of his faith in the younger generation, he says. The remark is aimed at the students jammed into the classroom.

Boulding
... a time to laugh

One of the reasons for his optimism, he says, is that the "evolutionary potential of the human nervous system is very far from being exhausted."

Boulding, who thinks the time has come to make energy more costly through higher taxation, also suggests that ration cards could be used to ensure fair distribution — to prevent the rich from having an unfair advantage.

This is needed, he says, because man has treated energy in a wasteful manner.

Uranium, he says, turned out, like most other energy sources, to be a treasure chest that became a Pandora's box.

The same was true of oil and gas, of which he said: "The Devil came to us about 1890 and said: 'I've got something good for you — a suit of armor with about 200 horses inside.'" The example was the birth of the car and all the fuel and pollution problems it has created.

Man faces danger not only through nuclear power, but through hydro-electric power and the threat that is being posed by some dams, he said.

"They tell us these are low probabilities. But the trouble with low probabilities is that if you wait long enough they will show up."

Time, he said, would turn them into "almost certainties."

At one point during his warning that some energy shortages might occur this winter, the classroom was plunged into darkness. A student in the standing-room crowd had accidentally backed into a light switch.

It brought a broad smile from Boulding, along with a few lines from Tennyson. The aging economist, who has also found time to write poetry, uses Tennyson at will to emphasize some of his points. During a 50-minute address and 30-minute question period, Boulding dropped some of these lines:

- "Canada is a very interesting study in human experience." It lacks unity in religion, politics and culture. "If Canada can exist, what can't? It has no unity of any conceivable kind except that railway."

His background and its relationship to various kinds of energy: "I grew up in Liverpool before the Beatles, but at the end of the coal."

- Despite the problems created by the car: "If we lose the automobile we're going to have a great sense of loss. It was an enormous democratizer. It turned everyone into knights."
- "Watergate was encouraging. It showed you can still have an apparatus for getting rid of a rascal."
- "The Soviet Union is one of the last relics of 19th-century empires. It is a dull, tyrannical society."
- "China puzzles me. China is the communism of Madison Avenue — the tyranny of persuasion."

Hidden welfare for big incomes

A hidden welfare system kicks back money through income tax exemptions and deductions to people in higher income brackets, according to a study done by the National Council on Welfare.

It has been estimated that in 1974, 17 income tax exemptions cost the federal government $6.4 billion dollars, while a guaranteed-income scheme would only cost $1 to $2 billion annually, council director Ed Tamagno told University of Victoria students Monday.

"Imagine if the minister of finance proposed a system of grants toward home ownership, and proposed that the grants should be higher the more income anyone had.

"Of course, that is unimaginable.

"But that is, in fact, what happens under the registered homeownership savings plan," he said.

"You can read Hansard when the plan was debated, and everyone was saying it was the greatest thing since sliced bread, because no one realized the real distributive effects of deduction through income tax."

Tamagno said that under the plan, every taxpayer was entitled to put up to $1,000 a year, to a maximum of $10,000, into a special account, and if the money was used to buy a home, pay no income tax on it.

The effect, for people saving the maximum amount, was that a taxpayer in the $2,000-to-$5,000 annual income bracket saved about $203, while someone making between $20,000 and $50,000 saved an average of $462.

The child-care deduction program worked in a similar way, he said, so that a woman with one child and earning $6,000 a year would derive a benefit of $257 a year from the program, while a woman earning $20,000 a year would derive a $380 benefit.

"Why should the government be giving a higher grant for child care through a tax saving to a woman making $20,000, than to a woman making only $6,000?" he asked.

The income tax system, he said, was based on the premise that people in similar income brackets should pay the same amount of tax.

However, even two people making the same amount could be taxed differently if one made some of that money from savings interest.

The tax on $20,000 of earned income after deductions would be $5,020, but if the earned income were $19,000, and the other $1,000 came from savings income, then the tax would be $4,640.

"That amounts to a government grant of $380."

Tamagno contended that if the government wished such a grant it should do so publicly by offering tax credits, so that everyone realized how much government money was actually being spent in such a welfare system.

Tamagno said the council was set up in 1969 as a citizens' advisory body of low-income people and professionals to give advice to the health and welfare minister.

The council had zeroed in on the need for some kind of income redistribuution, and a guaranteed annual income, but had always been told that such a system would be too expensive.

Eventually, council members had decided to look at the tax collection system to see if the money was being collected fairly from various income brackets.

"We found the income tax system was one of the government's principal means for distributing money to Canadians.

"It distributes money by means of exemptions, deductions and tax credits which allow certain people in certain situations not to pay what otherwise would be their fair share of tax," he said.

One of the more destructive aspects of the system was its secrecy.

"Every one of the deductions and exemptions generates large expenditures on the part of government, but no one knows how large or to whom, and we clearly have no way of evaluating the program."

Tamagno said that at the very least the government should publish how much money was going in grants through the income tax system.

"At least then when we argue about programs extending benefits to lower-income people, such as unemployment insurance or social assistance, we have some basis for comparison.

"We would be able to look at the other side — at the transfer programs to people who are manifestly not poor and who are not getting a bad deal out of the income tax system."

Days are numbered for riding academy

After more than 50 years in business, the Victoria Riding Academy in Oak Bay is on the way out.

Even a representative of the academy's management committee, set up with the hope of keeping the recreational landmark alive, conceded this at Monday night's council meeting.

After discussion of a letter from the management committee asking for written reasons why councul had refused the academy tax-free status in 1977, David Campbell said:

"The use of the property as an academy for holding purposes is good."

He pointed out that if council took over the nine-acre property, it would lose not only the taxes paid by the academy, but also $2,400 a year rental, and the municipality would have to pay the costs of maintaining it.

Aldermen answered two points raised in the academy committee's letter by saying first that if it granted the academy tax-free status, it would be faced with similar requests from other recreational facilities such as golf courses and the Oak Bay Marina, and second that council still hadn't decided on a future use for the property.

Mayor Brian Smith said although council hasn't any plans for the property, "perhaps the time has come when we should debate and present a plan."

Ald. Douglas Watts said council couldn't do much effective planning until it had control of the site. "Some fairly hard decisions have to be made," he added.

If the academy were to continue on the site, "we should work out a system for payment of both rent and taxes on a monthly basis."

He said there was a lot of emotionalism over the property, but the site was worth more than $1 million at today's prices and "I don't think council should be put in this position of being told you don't get taxes unless you agree to something."

Academy representatives denied that 1976 taxes were withheld as a way of obtaining tax-free status for 1977. They said the delay had been due to their difficulties in obtaining a copy of the academy's lease.

Ald. John Goult said council would be irresponsible if it permitted the present tenancy to continue without changes in the academy's business management and capital improvements.

He said council would have to debate among itself and among the public whether to continue the present use with some changes, develop the property or retain it for some other recreational use.

Plan to get help in North Saanich

North Saanich will retain the services of the Capital Region District's planning department for the preparation of its community plan, at a cost of $16,000 to $20,000.

In conjunction with its compilation of a community-wide plan, the planning department will also complete controversial zoning bylaw 194, at council's request.

Under Acting Mayor George Westwood, council voted unanimously Monday to retain the regional district's planning assistance.

Ald. Eric Sherwood expressed misgivings that council might be shelling out $20,000 for "four or five months' work."

Zoning bylaw 194 is expected to be completed by mid-April, and Westwood said the community plan should be in final form well before the end of the year.

A motion passed at a Dec. 6 meeting of council allows for further consideration of the bylaw, and states: "The zoning committee shall make a presentation to the council on amendments not later than the second meeting in April."

The motion also states that a public meeting will be held to discuss proposed amendments to the bylaw before its April presentation.

Public feeling last year ran against the bylaw, which proposed restrictions on in-law suites and on secondary buildings such as boathouses. It also prohibited subdivisions of less than seven acres except by special application.

Police identify gun victim

SECHELT, B.C. (CP) — RCMP in Sechelt have identified a 12-year-old boy shot to death in his home Sunday night as Brian James Taylor. In hospital in Vancouver in stable condition are his mother, Maude Ethel Taylor, 35, and a nine-year-old sister, Susan Roberta Taylor. The mother had suffered knife and gunshot wounds; the girl had been shot.

Sydney train disaster death toll 79

SYDNEY, Australia (UPI) — Rescuers worked through the night into the morning to find any survivors amid the wreckage of a commuter train that was flattened by tons of concrete from a collapsed bridge.

Police said the official death toll by mid-day reached 79 persons and an undetermined number of bodies were believed to be still trapped inside. Ninety-one persons were injured in Australia's worst train disaster.

The train derailed and plowed into a bridge, collapsing the span. The overhead road bridge came down, ripping apart the train's wooden coaches "like a sardine can," according to one survivor.

"Most of the victims were in the fourth car. The bridge would weigh at least 1,000 tons and it collapsed like a pack of cards right onto the train," Harry Kramer, a rescuer, said.

Kramer, his face blackened and his eyes red-rimmed after more than 10 hours of trying to reach victims, recalled their courage.

"One elderly man with both his legs nearly hanging off and his body pinned by a carriage door, said 'Come along you blokes, only another few feet.' He died just as we got to him.

"A young mother with a severed foot and clinging to her daughter was dragged out of the wreck screaming 'My child is still in there.' We couldn't tell her that the child was dead," Kramer said.

"A middle-aged man had a remarkable escape," Kramer added. "He was in the third carriage as the train struck the bridge. He sat on the floor, waited and walked out of the car just as the roof collapsed behind him under tons of concrete."

Three cars crossing the bridge at the time of the accident, also went down with the bridge. However, their drivers were rescued by two butchers who rushed out of their shops with ropes.

Twelve cranes were brought in to help lift the concrete off the wooden carriages as rescue work went through the night with the help of powerful arc lamps.

A gas leak from the main overpass hampered rescue squads and oxygen was pumped into the pancaked carriages.

"One naked flame and this place will go sky-high," said Sam Polistini, a member of the gas company emergency squad.

Second-highest alcohol test costs $750 fine

What is believed to be the second-highest blood-alcohol reading ever recorded in Victoria resulted in a $750 fine Tuesday in Victoria provincial court for a 32-year-old Esquimalt resident.

Ivan Juresa of 564 Paradise originally pleaded not guilty through a Czechoslovakian interpreter, but later changed the plea to guilty on a charge of having a blood-alcohol content of .08 per cent last Friday.

Juresa, in making his original plea, explained that he was still able to drive.

"You may have felt able to drive," Judge William Ostler said later, "because most people in your position, unfortunately, feel they are able to drive, but you were extremely drunk."

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan told the court Victoria city police noticed Juresa swerving on Douglas Street at about 8:30 p.m. and stopped him. Police gave Juresa a breath test and came up with a reading of .35, Mulligan said.

"What was that reading?" asked Ostler, leaning forward.

Mulligan repeated the reading and said that a second breath test produced a reading of .36.

The highest known reading before a Victoria court was a .40 in late 1972. A second test in that incident produced a reading of .41.

Insp. Robert Rivers of the RCMP's traffic division said Tuesday the highest reading ever recorded in the province was .44, obtained a few years ago in Prince George.

A Vancouver man had the second-highest reading in B.C., .42.

Rivers also said there had been rare instances in the province of .39 readings.

Confidence vote put before house

The New Democratic Party finally placed the opposition's traditional vote of non-confidence in the government on the floor of the Legislature Tuesday night.

Monday, Speaker Ed Smith had ruled out of order a David Barrett motion of non-confidence on grounds he was trying to do indirectly what he could not do directly.

Had Barrett's bid been successful, the house would be debating the Grizzly Valley share-trading affair.

But what Barrett couldn't achieve Monday, Graham Lea (NDP—Prince Rupert) achieved Tuesday.

At the conclusion of his contribution to the throne speech debate, Lea moved a vote of non-confidence in the government because it had failed to deal with unemployment problems facing B.C.

Before making his motion, Lea hit out at the immorality of the present government regarding the Grizzly Valley issue.

The non-confidence motion debate is expected to continue throughout today, but will not affect the legislative timetable leading up to introduction of the provincial budget next Monday.

Trustees late with decisions

The Greater Victoria School Board will not be able to meet a Jan. 31 deadline for decisions on its planning report No. 12.

Chariman Susan Brice said the board might discuss some of the report's recommendations at a Feb. 3 meeting, but no decisions would be made until at least the Feb. 21 regular meeting of the board.

Most of the recommendations in the planning report, which was issued in December, will not have to be made until Oct. 31, the report says, but a number of decisions should be made by the end of January.

These relate to restructuring of grades in the Esquimalt area, changes at Lambrick Park high school, postponement of Grade 11 courses originally planned for Lansdowne, closure of a shingle annex at Sir James Douglas, retention of South Park and relocation of Sundance School to Mountain View.

These decisions were necessary to keep long-range options open for the district, according to the planning report, prepared by school district planning staff.

Battle of the spaces flares in Oak Bay

A committee of Oak Bay council will attempt to resolve a dispute brewing between the public library and the senior citizens' activity centre over use of space in the building the two groups share at 1442 Monterey.

The issue was referred to committee Monday after council considered representations from both groups to take over undeveloped space underneath the Centennial library.

R. M. Battles, of 2237 Windsor, also expressed concern over the senior citizens' activity centre's desire to use the space and wrote he felt "priority should go to the library, which serves the broadest spectrum of age groups."

A possible solution was offered by Ald. Shirley Dowell, who said it might be possible to provide an extra 1,500 square feet in the foyer with a small amount of renovation.

In that event, the space would be available to the senior ctitizens, while the children's library could go in the basement as the library board wishes, providing room for the adult library to expand upstairs.

Ald. John Goult said the idea was worth ivestigating and successfully moved the matter be referred to council committee for further study.

Angels sign Mike Cuellar

ANAHEIM (AP) — Mike Cuellar, who has four times won 20 games a season during his 12-year major league baseball career, signed a contract Tuesday with California Angels, general manager Harry Dalton announced.

Cuellar, a 39-year-old lefthander, was released by Baltimore, where he was 14-13 with a 4.96 earned run average last season.

Co-winner of the American League Cy Young award in 1969, Cuellar has a 185-129 lifetime record to go with a 3.12 career ERA.

Researchers hunt for infancy clue in heart disease

SAN ANTONIO, Tex. (UPI) — Increasing evidence from pigeons, monkeys and baboons that heredity played a major role in a person's susceptibility to coronary artery disease, was reported by two scientists this week.

They hope their research will lead to ways to identify a person in infancy who is more likely to develop heart disease later in life because of inherited traits. If such a test can be developed, then doctors could recommend preventive action at an early age when it would be most beneficial.

"Our best working hypothesis is that several environmental factors interact with inherited characteristics to produce disease of varying degrees," said Dr. Henry McGill, of the University of Texas health science centre addressing an American Heart Association seminar.

The problem centres around cholesterol in the blood and the way it and other fatty substances build up on the inner walls of arteries, setting the stage for heart attack and stroke. This is the process of atherosclerosis.

High levels of cholesterol in the blood are known to accelerate atherolsclerosis in humans and laboratory animals. Most of a human's cholesterol comes from food but the effects of diet on cholesterol levels in the blood vary.

Environmental factors believed to contribute to the disease are cigarette smoking and possibly physical activity and stress. In addition, it is known that high blood pressure, tendencies for which can be inherited, has a key role in coronary heart disease.

"We're quite certain that atherosclerosis begins in childhood," McGill said. "If you believe the genetic influence, then it begins at conception."

The variability of the effects of diet on cholesterol levels in the blood can be measured in animal tests. Dr. Thomas Clarkson of Wake Forest University said his studies show a 10-fold difference in cholesterol levels in the blood of squirrel monkeys fed the same food.

Clarkson said research shows that 65 per cent of the variability of cholesterol levels in the monkeys is due to inherited factors.

He said other studies using pigeons suggested that inherited traits can also affect the way artery walls respond to elevated concentrations of cholesterol in the blood, with fatty buildup worse in some animals than others even though other diet and other measureable factors were the same.

McGill said studies with baboons agreed with Clarkson's findings that heredity affects the levels of cholesterol in the bood.

"This suggests that persons with an inherited predisposition to high blood cholesterol levels, which are known to accelerate atherosclerosis can probably be identified in infancy."

Dr. Ronald Laner of the University of Iowa College of Medicine said studies of humans supported the link between heredity and coronary disease. He said a study of school children in Muscatine, Iowa, found that children whose blood cholesterol levels were unusually high had seven times more close relatives who died of heart disease than children with normal cholesterol levels.

Nervous cat felled by mouse

SHALDON, England (UPI) — A mouse called Goliath mugged Percy the tomcat, slashing his nose over a saucer of milk, Percy's owner said.

"I couldn't believe my eyes," Mrs. Irene Arnot said.

Goliath lives in the Arnot's garden and Percy in the past made himself scarce when the mouse nipped into the kitchen to steal a drink of milk from Percy's saucer.

Then this week, they accidentally met across the saucer. Goliath bit a chunk out of Percy's nose and chased the cat away.

"Percy's a very nervous cat," Mrs. Arnot said.

UVic awards okayed

New scholarships and awards in archeology, chemistry, astronomy and education have been approved by the University of Victoria.

The annual Pett award in archeology will assist a student who wishes to do field or laboratory work in B.C. archeology. Selection will be made by the senior instructor in archeology in the university's anthropology department.

The annual Stephen A. Ryce memorial scholarship, named after a long-time member of UVic's chemistry department, will be awarded annually to a third-year chemistry student at UVic.

A book award of up to $30 will be awarded annually to the top astronomy graduate at the UVic centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada.

Sons and daughters of B.C. Teachers Credit Union members will be eligible for a $400 bursary offered by the credit union to students entering their final year in the education faculty or post-graduate teacher training program.

The University Board of Governors has asked for more information about the Allen Boag scholarship before giving it their blessing.

The $500 scholarship is offered for the best essay on some aspect of socialism.

Governors questioned one condition of the award, that students intending to compete for it must have their essay subject approved by the political science department.

Prior approval of this kind is unusual, and could conflict with the political views of members of the department, several governors said. UVic president Dr. Howard Petch will get further information on the scholarship for the next board of governors meeting.

Peninsula: Co-operate or go dry

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist Correspondent

Critical water supply problems in Sidney and Brentwood could be held off this summer if Saanich Peninsula authorities co-operate, Central Saanich Ald. Dave Hill told the inaugural meeting Tuesday of the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission.

He was responding to a request from Sidney that the township be allowed to drill a new well immediately to offset an expected water shortage this summer.

Sidney will, however, go ahead, in conjunction with North Saanich, on an investigation of possible well locations and cost-sharing.

Hill said there was concern that new wells would draw down the level of all wells.

"I hope we will have better co-operation between the water suppliers without a bunch of political hangups this summer," said Hill.

"I suggest that for the next few months it is going to be up to the senior municipal staffs on the peninsula to get together to try to throw what water supply we have to one another without some trying to hold onto the water as we had a tendency to do in the past."

Hill also suggested that if any water restrictions had to be imposed during the summer, all three municipalities should act together and have uniform regulations.

Commissioner Joseph Taylor said the whole peninsula was in a desperate situation.

Commissioner Harry Peard said water in wells and reservoirs was going down even at a time of year when needs were at a minimum.

Commissioner James Lang said input into wells was less than at this time last year, and the quality of the water was also deteriorating.

"We are in trouble right now," he said.

"The situation is critical," Hill commented.

He said he had been able to persuade Central Saanich council to put a five-acre "hold" on all new plans for subdivisions.

The commission also decided to ask Capital Region District engineer Norman Howard to advise on the possibilities of immediate relief through connection with Greater Victoria Water Board supplies.

He said he felt some connection could be installed by summer if several contractors were employed simultaneously.

The commissioners doubted that such swift action was likely, but asked for a report.

A five-man committee was formed to start negotiations with the Greater Victoria Water Board for the extension of water to the peninsula.

Firemen accept last year's pact

Victoria firefighters voted "almost" unanimously Tuesday night to accept terms of a new agreement with the city. The move ends a dispute that is more than a year old.

Under the agreement which covers only 1976, the 104 firefighters get wage parity with their Vancouver counterparts. This was called for in earlier binding arbitration, but the city had declined to match the interim Vancouver pay level on fear of being penalized for exceeding the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

The compromise proposal accepted by the firefighters provides for deductions from the new pay level to comply with a rollback ordered by the AIB in the 1975 award. There is also agreement for recovery of money in the event of a rollback in the 1976 award.

The agreement, which ends a strike threat, provides another $35 a month giving the first-class firefighter $1,422. The deduction for the rollback is expected to wipe out $32 of the increase.

A spokesman for the firefighters said the union is expected to sign the contract with representatives of the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association today.

Negotiations for a 1977 agreement are already in the preliminary stages.

Parents told:

Shot girl faces life paralysed

Doctors have told the parents of a five-year-old Brentwood Bay girl that she is probably paralysed for life following an accident with a handgun last Saturday, Central Saanich Police Chief Robert Miles said Tuesday.

Tara Michelle Harknett was showing the .22-calibre handgun to some friends on Saturday, apparently after taking it from a drawer in her parents' bedroom and loading it herself, Miles said.

A neighbor boy who was holding the handgun discharged it, and the bullet entered the girl's chest, puncturing a lung and shattering her spinal cord.

She is paralysed from the waist down, and doctors have told her parents the damage is irreparable, Miles said.

Tara's parents were away at the time, and two teenagers in the home were babysitting her.

Her father said the gun, the type frequently referred to as a "Saturday-night special," had not been working properly, and he had put it away, thinking it could not be fired. The gun was not properly registered, Miles said, but no charges were contemplated.

He said the incident should serve as a warning to any gun-owner who might think a weapon did not work.

"He should contact police, who will come and dispose of it," Miles said.

Union decides to drop action against eleven

A membership meeting of Victoria's outside civic workers decided Tuesday night to drop charges against 11 members accused of contravening union policy by working on the Oct. 14 day of protest.

James Walker, president of the outside workers' local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said the vote was almost unanimous. There was one opposing vote out of about 60.

The charges had been brought against the 11 by other rank-and-file members. Nine of those involved are parks employees and the other two are in the sanitation department.

Walker said after the three-hour meeting that he would be proposing revision of the constitution to prevent a repetition of "the way charges are brought up."

He said the present method of electing a trial committee before the membership even decided people should be charged was "not a very organized way."

Before the meeting, Walker had said he was disturbed by reports the CUPE local was taking a tough stand against those who went against the policy of observing the Oct. 15 national labor protest against anti-inflation laws.

Thieves take $5,000 goods from home

Oak Bay police estimate that $5,000 worth of goods was taken in a burglary of a home on Cadboro Bay.

Joy Marampon discovered the break-in Monday afternoon when she returned to 2171 Cadboro Bay from a weekend trip to West Vancouver with her husband, Lucio. They had left the house vacant since Friday.

Missing were a Sony stereo component valued at $1,000, a $600 brass sextant, a black-and-white television set, guitar, camera, digital clock radio, watch, portable typewriter, gold ring and opal earrings.

Police said entry was gained through a basement door which was forced open.

Soft-spoken Indian leader says:

Land fate 'up to all people'

The average Canadian will have to take an active interest in the settlement of Indian land claims if claims are to be decided fairly.

Indian leader Harold Cardinal, in his ninth year as president of the Indian Association of Alberta, told a large audience Tuesday night at the Victoria central library that federal and provincial governments will look to the people for a sense of direction in their decision-making on land claims.

Cardinal stressed, however, that no group in Canada could match the advertising powers of multi-national corporations or public relations experts hired by provincial and federal governments to sell their side to the public.

If the land claims issue is not resolved fairly, the sense of grievance will never be wiped out among Indians in this country, Cardinal said.

Wearing a buckskin jacket and speaking carefully, almost softly, Cardinal told an audience of non-native and native people that the question of development in the Northwest Territories and the Athabasca oil sands in Alberta would become a focal point of interest to whites and Indians alike.

Cardinal, a Cree, said the B.C. government is "copping out" if it thinks the issue of land claims is the responsibility of the federal government.

"What would the province say if the federal government suddenly decided to give three-quarters of the B.C. land base back to the Indians?" he asked.

Remarking on his new book, The Rebirth of Canada's Indians, Cardinal said the election of a Parti Quebecois government in Quebec has forced all Canadians to ask themselves: Who are we, where are we going, and what kind of legacy are we going to leave our children.

"At the present time, Indians enjoy a constitutional relationship with the federal Crown. Indians must decide if they want to maintain a trusteeship with a substantially revised federal government, and if they want to place their trust in another group, especially since the government hasn't made any outstanding contribution to the Indian way of life in the last 100 years."

Canadians had a responsibility to present and future generations to find answers to questions that would be raised in the critical period over the next two to four years, he said.

"Leaders, both Indian and white, should leave the acting to Hollywood and start finding answers to the social problems that plague us all," Cardinal said.

"Indians do not have a monopoly on injustice. Many peoples in this country and other countries have been subjected to injustice. Our goal is to learn from past injustices so they don't happen in the future."

Cardinal said the federal government had failed to make land settlements with more than half the native population in Canada.

Victoria woman, 85, first traffic fatality

An 85-year-old woman became Greater Victoria's first traffic fatality of 1977.

Florence Nightingale Smith, of 212-1147 Quadra, died Tuesday about two hours after she was struck at Fort and Quadra by a truck driven by 25-year-old Stephen Gregory Henson of 1010 McKenzie, Saanich.

Police said the accident occurred shortly before 11 a.m. when the elderly pedestrian was attempting to cross the street at the corner. Henson's truck, police said, was apparently travelling south on Quadra and was making a left turn onto Fort.

She was taken to Victoria General Hospital but was pronounced dead at 1:40 p.m., police said.

Victoria city police are appealing to any witnesses to call the traffic division at 384-4111.

Pump meet now Monday

The Oak Bay sewerage advisory committee will meet Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers to consider a consulting engineer's report on a proposal to use Trial Island for a sewage pumping station site.

The proposal is one alternative being explored by the committee to a location on the Shoal Bay shoreline selected earlier by the Capital Region Board.

The meeting had been scheduled for tonight, but committee chairman Ald. John Goult changed the date because some members had other commitments.

Switch to night sittings

Mika readies access bylaw

Rookie Saanich Ald. John Mika fulfilled his main election promise Monday when he served notice of motion to amend council's procedure bylaw.

Mika's motion, which will be introduced at the next council meeting, would make council and its business more accessible to residents.

He is also proposing council meetings be switched from afternoons to nights and he wants agendas of all council and major committee meetings advertised in advance.

He is also seeking changes to give direct and unrestricted opportunity for residents to address council; redefinition of circumstances under which meetings may be closed to the press and public, and clarification of rights of the press to record meetings.

Several candidates in last November's Saanich election ran on the platform of reverting to night meetings and an end to the numerous closed meetings of council.

More men soon for search unit

More men are on their way to Comox to bolster the beleagured 442 Search and Rescue Squadron.

Transfer of 35 men to the squadron would enable crews to respond to weekend emergencies in 30 minutes, compared with the two hours now allowed, Lt.-Gen. William Carr, chief of Canada's Air Command, told a Victoria press conference Tuesday.

He also said there was a possibility that additional Buffalo aircraft would be sent to Comox to supplement the fleet of three now used primarily for rescue missions.

In a brief reference to a campaign by Campbell River volunteer coast guard agent Dr. Robert Somerville to have rescue facilities on Canada's West Coast upgraded, Carr said: "Somerville has been a big help to us with his constructive criticism, but one should not attempt to draw comparisons between the East Coast and the West Coast."

Somerville has charged that the East Coast has more equipment than the West Coast despite figures showing that the Pacific region handles more incidents than the Atlantic region.

Carr said a vast number of the incidents occurring on the West Coast took place in coastal areas as opposed to stretches of open sea off the East Coast.

He said two additional helicopters would be located at Comox as part of the recently announced multi-million dollar marine search-and-rescue improvement program.

Admitting that "we have had problems obtaining replacement parts for the Buffalos at Comox," Carr said the problem was being solved.

The possibility of improving the capacity of the rescue aircraft was under study, as well as replacement of the Voodoo jet interceptor. "We have to replace our existing aircraft if we are to fulfil our commitments," he said.

While in Victoria, Carr, the national commissioner of Boy Scouts, met local scout officials to discuss plans for the Canadian Jamboree being held this year in Prince Edward Island.

Gunman aborts holdup

City police were searching for a stockily-built man after an abortive armed holdup late Tuesday at the Shop-Easy store on Cook Street.

The masked man produced a shotgun and demanded money after entering the store about 9 p.m.

He left without anything after being told by a clerk there was no money, police said.

Labor vote interference 'nonsense'

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Victoria MLA Charles Barber dismissed as "nonsense" Tuesday claims that either he or the New Democratic Party had tried to manipulate tonight's Victoria Labor Council elections.

"That's totally unfounded and total nonsense," Barber said as reports circulated that he and his party wanted John Schibli replaced as council president.

Schibli is expected to be challenged only by Jack Groves, a former council president and part of a group of dissenters.

Earlier, Groves (International Woodworkers of America), Linda Baker (B.C. Government Employees' Union), James Walker (Canadian Union of Public Employees), and Larry Tickner (United Brotherhood of Carpenters) were nominated along with Schibli, who is also with the carpenters.

Tickner has not been associated with the dissenters. But the others decided among themselves who was best equipped to challenge Schibli and, while they made no announcement of their findings, Groves emerged as the choice.

Nearly all of the key figures in both camps are members of the New Democratic Party, something that would appear to discount the possibility of party politics. However, the labor council, like the rest of the labor movement in B.C., has felt the effects of a serious split over the question of leadership.

Schibli supported controversial B.C. Federation of Labor secretary Len Guy during the recent federation convention, while Groves, Ms. Baker and Walker supported the unsuccessful election bid of Art Kube of the Canadian Labor Congress.

The bitter fight that preceded the Guy re-election was dotted with all kinds of accusations, including claims that the fine hand of NDP leader David Barrett was playing a part in efforts to oust Guy.

Party faithful not only denied such reports, but were extremely critical of them.

The tough-talking Guy was considered to be standing in the way of those who would bring more sophistication to the labor movement. Many of those who opposed him were concerned with attacks he made on the NDP during its years in government.

Some informants say the bad feelings have spilled down to the labor council level and that efforts are being made to defeat those who backed Guy.

But others within the labor movement say they find this hard to believe. They tend to think the situation has been highly exaggerated.

Those who argue against this, however, point out that Ms. Baker, most outspoken of the dissenters, is a member of the NDP executive in Victoria and has been appointed by Barber to his recently-formed committee on industrial democracy.

However, Barber is said to have appointed her strictly because of the enthusiasm she showed for the prospect of studying the industrial democracy system that allows employee participation.

Ms. Baker, who has come a long way at the age of 25, is gradually becoming a controversial figure. While Groves and Walker have remained guarded in their comment, she has attacked the labor council leadership for what she describes as "tunnel vision," and says the time has come for fresh ideas.

It is difficult to determine how much support she has, but it is known that she is considered by many veteran labor men to be nothing more than overly ambitious.

Ms. Baker is expected to seek the first vice-presidency tonight. She is currently second vice-president.

Those close to the scene say there now appears little doubt that Schibli will be returned for a third one-year term as president.

Meanwhile, Barber says he would have to be "stupid" to want to interfere with a labor council election.

"The labor council is an independent body that makes its own decisions," he said. "We work with them (council) and are happy to work with them."

He said he respected Schibli and would show the same respect to anyone else elected.

This kindergarten teacher is bearded

EDMONTON (CP) — Gordon Morash, 24, believed to be the only male kindergarten teacher in the city's public school system, says although the job is tough, things so far have gone really smoothly.

Morash has the job of educating 25 youngsters in a cluttered classroom at McDougall school in the central portion of the city.

"I don't see any novelty in being a male teacher," he said. "It is novel, though, that I'm working because the job shortage is pretty high."

Morash completed a four-year course in education at University of Alberta last spring, the only male in a class of 27 specializing in early childhood instruction.

Although he admits to being worried about "parents thinking me weird," so far there have been no difficulties.

"Part of the reason they may have put me here is because there are a lot of single-parent families in the inner city," he said, and youngsters need a male figure to balance out their lives.

One difficulty is the presence of several non-English-speaking children in his class, but Morash said he is constructing a speech program involving phonetics to assist them.

"All in all, it's a hard job. With kids in the upper elementary grades, you can assume they know what a line is. Here, your assumptions are few; you have to assume they're very imperfect little people."

He teaches every weekday morning and free-lances as a writer in the afternoon, but said, "They could coax me into teaching an afternoon session because I'm already doing the amount of work required for two classes."

Dads rate high as moms—study

VANCOUVER (CP) — Fathers won higher scores than mothers in an experiment recording their behavior with infants.

University of Illinois psychologist Ross Parks has spent five years observing parents interacting with their newborn infants and has concluded fathers are as good as mothers at mothering.

In the experiment where fathers scored higher than mothers, their behavior with the infant was recorded at 15-second intervals and the only levels mothers were the feeders, smiling and handing-over categories.

Dads earned higher scores for looking at the baby, changing its position, touching, speaking, rocking, exploring and imitating.

Parks said he has proved "the four myths of fatherhood" are all false.

These myths are that fathers are uninterested, are less nurturing, tend to assume non-caretaking roles and are less competent.

He blamed the four myths on the theory of psychoanalysis which stresses the importance of feeding in psychological development and overemphasizes the mother's role.

Parks said recent experiments show this is not true.

One experiment to see how parents reacted to cues provided by the baby showed that fathers were alert and responded appropriately. For example, with a coughing or spitting attack during a feeding, fathers stopped the feeding and checked the infant.

Pulse of the family still throbs—survey

By JUDITH FRUTIG
Christian Science Monitor

LOS ANGELES — A four-year study of American family life has found that the only area in which fathers influence their children more than mothers is religious behavior.

But mothers are substantially more influential than fathers when it comes to religious belief (or non-belief), law and order, the work ethic, militarism, sexual permissiveness, politics, and social change.

The survey — taken by two sociology professors at the University of Southern California and believed to be the first of its kind among a major metropolitan blue-collar population — contradicts many earlier findings on parental influence.

Moreover, according to its authors, Vern Bengson and Alan Acock, it dispels some growing "myths" regarding the demise of the American family.

Among major conclusions:

Mothers have far greater influence on children than fathers do. "For a long time," says Bengtson, "sociology textbooks have suggested that children incorporate their fathers' values and orientation. By contrast, we've found that the mothers are the expressive leaders in the family . . . mothers are far more influential than fathers."

Young people tend to share more of their parents views of religion than their parents' views on politics.

Fathers' and sons' views do not match up any more than fathers' and daughters', neither do mothers' and daughters' attitudes.

Families who describe themselves as close may still experience a generation gap in attitudes pertaining to political beliefs and sexual permissiveness.

Affection between generations is increasing. "The family bond is growing," Bengtson says. "It's still not kosher to talk about how much you love your mother — except in a joking way. But they do."

Data for the study was drawn from a survey of 2,044 members of a health-care plan used by several Los Angeles-area labor unions. The 922 responses — each taking more than 90 minutes to complete — cover thre generations. The adults ranged in age from 45 to 64, the children from 16 to 26.

The strongest variable in the survey, according to the authors, is the "parent's church attendance" — followed closely by depth of religious beliefs.

"This suggests two things," the study says. "First, parents who wish to transmit either a religious or nonreligious attitude can be more effective, if they clearly express this attitude themselves.

"Second, and perhaps more interesting, the parents can do even beter if they practise their religious or nonreligious attitudes . . . thus (behavior) is not only most effective for transmitting religious behaviour, but also for transmitting religious attitudes.

Findings dispute certain widely held beliefs that:

The family unit is losing importance. "Our survey substantiates research over the last 15 years which shows that the family unit represents a valuable resource in a fast-changing society," says Bengtson," . . . especially for elderly members . . .the anxious handwringing over the decline of the Amdrican family is absolutele baloney."

Pilot, lax law death cause

QUEBEC (CP) — A careless pilot and lax law enforcement have been blamed for the drowning of 12 people on a boat excursion off the Gaspe Peninsula last Aug. 16. All those aboard the small boat were lost when it capsized in heavy seas after leaving Perce, on the eastern tip of the peninsula.

Marital boredom 'a warning sign'

By PATRICIA DIBSIE
Colonist Copley Service

Boredom isn't fatal to a marriage — but it's one of several warning signals that shouldn't be ignored, says Dr. Sheila Kessler, assistant professor of psychology at Georgia State University.

"Boredom — the 'I-don't-care' attitude — is just about the final stage before a marriage dies, and it's almost impossible to save," Kessler said in an interview.

She received her doctorate degree from the University of Washington in Seattle in 1971. She also has written a book on divorce.

Kessler works with several "beyond divorce" groups at the university counselling centre in Georgia.

She said that a couple going through a divorce needs the help of a professional just as much as a couple trying to reconcile. Maybe even more.

"Many people see the divorce process as a very destructive thing in a person's life," she said. "The destructive time — the time leading up to the divorce — is more detrimental. Once it has been established that a divorce is to be the course taken by a couple, some positive things need to happen."

Kessler said it's up to the professionals — the counsellors, psychologists, psychiatrists, clergy and other mental health workers — to help make the experience of a divorce a constructive one.

"It's one of the best times in a person's life, or it can be," she said.

"The decision has been made to divorce and he has opted for a whole new set of habits, friends and traditions. It's time for the person to think about what kind of lifestyle he wants. It's a good time for some positive thinking — what does this person want out of life that he didn't have in the marriage."

Kessler said she thinks the pain a person feels during the experience sets free a lot of energy.

"This energy can be used constructively to self-evaluate and learn new skills in dealing with people," she said.

As a counsellor, Kessler also works with couples trying to work out their marital problems before deciding on a divorce.

"After listening to a couple talk for a while it's relatively easy to see what stage the breakup is in," she said. "The first stage is disillusionment."

"This stage can occur after the first blush of love has faded," she said. "People take off their blinders and see there are some real differences — perhaps differences in sex drive, neatness or who gets to wear the pants in the family."

Kessler said that if the couple doesn't deal openly with those problems that stage two usually sets in.

"If they don't deal with their differences it can go underground and turn into an erosion stage where they start digging at one another — anything from subtle put-downs or passive avoidance to overt fighting."

Kessler's message: "If you're having trouble in your marriage find out what stage it's in and stop it there. Catch it and learn some tools to negotiate those differences."

Nutty flavor in mixed-grain bread is provided by walnuts

Hearty mixed-grain bread —with just a hint of nuts

By LOU SEIBERT PAPPAS
The Christian Science Monitor

PORTOLA VALLEY, Calif. — Some cooks have a knack for combining grains to create a wonderful-tasting, healthy, whole-grain bread. My mother does, and that's one of the bonuses of journeying to her home in Oregon's Willamette Valley.

Her latest bread is as fine-textured and cake-like as usual, but it is full of whole-grain flavor with a hint of nuts. Walnuts are blended-ground to provide a flour of their own. The bread is a deep, rich walnut color, as well.

Sliced and toasted, it is delicious spread lightly with sweet butter. A shimmering glass of homemade boysenberry jelly sits close at hand for gilding it.

As the seasons pass, her repertoire of bread changes: Sticky rolls and Holland brioche cakes with orange frosting were my childhood favorites.

Right now she favors the wholesome, mixed-grain breads, plus a braided white honey loaf.

Although she beats the dough thoroughly with a heavy-duty mixer, she still insists on kneading it 10 minutes on a floured board to achieve a fine texture and potentially greater volume.

Here's her walnut bread recipe:

FOUR GRAIN WALNUT BREAD

- 1 cup quick-cooking oatmeal
- 2 cups water
- 1 tablespoon salt
- ¼ cup molasses
- ¼ cup butter or margarine
- 2 packages active dry yeast
- 1¼ cups lukewarm water
- 1 cup rye flour
- 1 cup whole-wheat flour
- ½ cup wheat germ
- 1-3 cup bran flakes
- ½ cup fine-ground yellow corn meal
- 1 cup walnuts
- Unbleached all-purpose flour

Combine oatmeal and the 2 cups water in a saucepan and bring to a boil.

Remove from heat. Place in a mixing bowl the salt, molasses, and butter and pour the oatmeal mixture over them. Let cool to lukewarm. Sprinkle yeast into ½ cup of the lukewarm water and let stand until dissolved. Then add the dissolved yeast and remaining ¾ cup water to the oatmeal mixture, beating until smooth.

Add rye flour, wholewheat flour, wheat germ, bran flakes, and corn meal, and beat until smooth. Place walnuts in a blender container and blend until finely ground; mix into the dough. Gradually add enough white flour to make a soft dough. Turn out on a lightly floured board and knead until smooth and satiny.

Place in a bowl, cover, and let rise in a warm place until doubled in size. Punch down and turn out on a lightly floured board. Divide into thirds and shape each piece into a loaf. Place in three greased 9-by-5-inch loaf pans. Cover and let rise until double in size. Bake in a 375-degree F. oven for 35 to 40 minutes or until the loaves sound hollow when thumped. Remove from pans and let cool on a rack. Makes three loaves.

Birth control going natural

SASKATOON (CP) — Natural methods of birth control are gaining popularity, says Georges Legal, assistant executive director of Serena, Canada.

Although natural forms of contraception are not for everyone, he said they are being chosen by couples who want to be "closer to nature."

"Some women do not want to take drugs," he said. "They're not interested in sterilization and they don't want to be bothered with mechanical methods."

Legal said these people are often the same ones who choose natural childbirth, breast-feeding and natural foods.

Legal, in Saskatoon during a western tour, said there are 16 couples in Saskatchewan who either teach or are in training to teach the Serena method of natural family planning. The method consists of learning to recognize the fertile period in a woman's monthly cycle.

Legal says the World Health Organization has begun a study to evaluate the effectiveness of various natural family-planning methods.

Big weddings get low Marx

By CHRIS CATLIN

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Extravagant weddings reminiscent of the days before the revolution are enjoying a new vogue among status-seeking Soviet families.

The fashion, repeatedly condemned in the official press, is for expensive receptions attended by as many guests as possible.

For the parents of the bride and groom, who in Russia generally share the costs, it may mean squandering their savings and running up debts that take years to pay off.

It is not just the number of guests that counts, or the quantities of food and drink. Even the number of cars in the cavalcade to the palace of weddings is a measure of status.

One Soviet journalist summed it up: "In anything else you can be outdone, but on this score everything simply has to be as good as the next man's."

Most people would have trouble matching the brashness of a shop manager who was driven to his wedding at the head of a procession of 60 cars.

Still less would they be able to compete with the scientist who hired three storeys of a restaurant for his son's marriage reception and invited 900 guests. The bill, which the guests mercifully helped to pay, came to 20,000 roubles $250,000.

Krokobil, one satirical weekly, asked a woman factory director why she went to the expense of a wedding for 2,000 guests when her daughter and son-in-law could have used the money far better as a deposit on a house.

"What do you think we are, not as good as other people?" came the reply.

But one-upmanship is apparently only one reason for the fad.

"No one is appealing for ascetism or opposing happy marriages," said the newspaper Sovetskaya Rossiya, setting out the official view.

"But ruinous, bourgeois-style feasting gives rise to strong objections."

Pregnancy test rated fast, sure by doctor

NEW YORK (UPI) — A new pregnancy test gives a quick and accurate answer to the question, "am I pregnant?"

It also introduces the era of the mini-abortion for those wishing to end an unwanted pregnancy, its developer claims.

Dr. Brij B. Saxena, professor of endocrinology and biochemistry at Cornell University medical college, in an interview described the test developed with financial assistance from the U.S. National Institute of Health.

"It is almost 100 per cent accurate one day after the first missed menstrual period," he said.

"For rape victims, an early 'yes' allows for early, safe mini-abortions which, if desired, can be performed in five minutes in a doctor's office," Saxena said.

He explained that the instrument used in the mini-abortions is a suction device, introduced vaginally.

Saxena, on the staff of the New York Hospital-Cornell medical center, listed the following steps involved in the test:

- A few drops of blood are taken from the woman's finger by a laboratory technician.
- It is mixed with radioactkve iodine.
- Within an hour or two a procedure called radioreceptorassay measures the level of HCG (human chrionic gonadotropin) in the blood mixed with the "hot" iodine. That is a hormone that shows up early in pregnancy.

"If there is a lof of HCG, there's a pregnancy," Saxena said.

Pregnancy test kits called biocept-G contain the radioactive materials needed for the Saxena test and are now available to 6,000 U.S. hospitals which have nuclear regulatory commission licenses.

Saxena said he is hopeful the cost of the test, to be determined by individual hospitals, will be competitive with that of conventional but less speedy or reliable tests — from $5 to $10, he calculates.

Distribution of the pregnancy test kits was begun in December by the manufacturer, after approval by the United States food and drug administration.

Saxena said clinical experience with more than 3,000 who have taken the test confirmed its accuracy one day after the first missed menstrual period.

Injection by injection, little Danny's growing

MONTREAL (CP)—Five-year-old Danny Joly is reaching for the sky and the blonde-haired youngster is always smiling because he knows he is going to make it.

He has a pituitary condition which inhibits growth and at age two he was only 24 inches tall, says his mother, who administers regular injections to correct the deficiency.

There are 400 to 500 such children in Canada and Danny is one of the lucky few who receives treatment.

The only source of human growth hormone is from pituitary glands which are usually collected for transplanting, like human kidneys and eye corneas, after accidental deaths.

Dr. Harvey Guyda of the Montreal Children's Hospital, who is conducting research on human growth, said there is a great need for more donations.

Although 50 children in Quebec are being treated for pituitary conditions, another 30 are on the waiting list, he said. "This is the sad part. Many of these children are in their teens and, ideally, should have been treated before the age of five and certainly before the age of 10.

His data show that younger patients respond best to growth hormone and maintain a higher rate of growth during therapy than do older children.

DANNY
. . . hope grows

10,000 and 15,000 pituitary glands are donated in Canada each year, less than half the number needed to treat children suffering from growth hormone deficiency.

Most of the children talk and walk normally but, like Danny, continue to look like infants.

Mrs. Joly recalls an unhappy supermarket outing: "When a woman heard him talking and saw he was so small she asked me if I was starving him."

His foot size was zero and shoes suitable for walking were unavailable to him. During his first two years he grew only 4½ inches and his birth weight increased by only four pounds.

"With the hormones he grows four times as fast as normal," said Mrs. Joly.

He is 34½ inches tall now, but about the size of an average three-year-old, and outgrows his clothes almost as fast as his parents can buy them.

The treatment program, initiated by the federal government in 1968, is run and funded by the Medical Research Council.

Each injection a patient receives represents one pituitary gland and Danny has already received 250.

By the time he has reached his full height, at 16, he will probably have had 1,000 injections, said Mrs. Joly.

ann landers

..Dear Ann Landers: I'm a 50-year-old woman with her on equal rights proposal.

Last summer my husband and I spent two weeks camping. The feeling of freedom was wonderful. Part of it was going without my girdle for 14 glorious days!

The first evening back home we were eager to share our experiences with some close friends, so we treated them to dinner. When we got home, my husband said, "You looked a little sloppy tonight. Why didn't you wear your girdle?"

I became angry and invited him to look in the mirror and see which one of us looked sloppier. We both decided to go on a diet.

The next day I was still mad. I went downtown and bought a girdle — for him. When he came home, I said, "Put this on. You look a little sloppy." He thought I was kidding and replied, "Those things are for women." I told him they were for anybody with bulges — and he qualified.

Now we both wear girdles, and he not only looks better but says his back is giving him less trouble. Print this, Ann. We might get something going. — Equal In Dubuque

Dear Equal: I doubt we'll start a trend but thanks for writing. Your letter was my laugh for the day.

Dear Ann Landers: Your response to the woman who hated smoking was downright gutless, "No Go In San Leandro" told you she removed the ashtrays in her living room but it didn't help. Her brother-in-law called her "some kind of nut," lit a cigarette anyway and put the ashes in his pants cuff. Her neighbor started to smoke in the kitchen, saw no ashtrays handy so she used the pot of African violets. Her husband's boss simply dropped his cigar ashes on the rug and said, "This'll keep the moths out."

Why didn't you tell her (as you have told so many others) to substitute that macaroni in her spine for a little stiffer stuff? I was shocked when you simply commented on the oddball traffic in her house and suggested that she keep some ashtrays handy "just in case."

I know a top-flight executive who owns a very successful cosmetic company in Lakewood, Ohio. He has signs posted all over the place that say, "Thank you for not smoking." If anyone lights up a cigar or a cigarette in his office he says, "Sorry, no one smokes in here. If you must have a cigarette, there's a room down the hall you can use."

Now there's an approach I admire — Outspoken In Ohio

Dear Out: I recognize the man. He's my good friend Jess Bell. You are right. Bell's approach is forthright and admirable. I urge other executives to follow his example. Sorry I took a dive. Thanks for hauling me up short.

Dear Ann Landers: Inasmuch as a poll was conducted in your column for people who, if thy had it to do over again, would not have had children, why not conduct a poll for people who would rather not have been born? — Curious In Fort Smith, Ark.

Dear Ark: I suspect you are being facetious but without conducting a poll, I can tell you that millions of people in this world are miserable and depressed. For them there is no joy in living. They would rather no thave been born.

Gas fields 'inadequate'

Alex Macdonald (NDP-Vancouver East) said Tuesday that the former New Democratic government rejected plans for a Grizzly Valley pipeline because of inadequate natural gas reserves.

Macdonald told reporters that a report prepared for the former government showed there was only two billion cubic feet of gas in the fields located in northeast B.C. He said there should be two trillion cubic feet to make such a project worthwhile.

Macdonald said he believed the Social Credit government approved plans for the pipeline in December because of "puffed up" reserve estimates.

He said those figures showed there was a reserve of 500 billion cubic feet, and even that doesn't justify a pipeline.

During question period in the legislature, Macdonald asked both Premier Bennett and Forests Minister Tom Waterland to provide exact figures of the Grizzly Valley gas reserves.

Both ministers took the question on notice and said they would attempt to provide answers today.

Macdonald said the questions he asked in the legislature were only the start of what will be a lengthy attack on the government on the Grizzly Valley affair.

To date, most of the controversy surrounding the $100 million pipeline has centred on stocks trading by aides to Economic Development Minister Don Phillips.

Two aides, along with two members of the B.C. Petroleum Corp., have lost their jobs after admitting trading in stocks of Quasar Petroleum Ltd. and Cheyenne Petroleum Ltd. prior to the government announcement Dec. 10 to develop the Grizzly Valley reserves.

'Conceit' of experts holds back pump

VANCOUVER (CP) — Frank Hillis of Victoria says he has perfected a fish loading and unloading device that could help save lives at sea, but federal fisheries officials oppose his invention.

Hillis demonstrated his water-jet-powered device Monday by pumping 40 tons of herring through it in less than an hour, but fisheries department officials were not convinced of its worth.

Bill Razzell, director of technology and inspection for the department's Pacific region, said the pump had not proved that it could do the job.

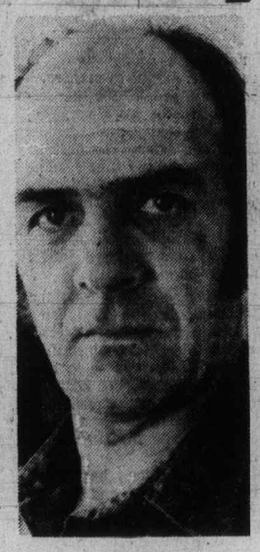
Hillis accused the department of deliberately blocking efforts to market a device that showed its worth three years ago.

"It's straight conceit. All these fisheries types have engineering degrees. I don't have one, so they don't recognize me.

"I've been building and demonstrating these pumps for more than three years, and last November the government experts tell the major fishing companies that my pumps won't do the job, and it puts me out of business."

Hillis said he sold 25 of his machines at $18,500 each before he found himself without customers.

A fisherman himself, Hillis said the best feature of his pump, aside from its ease of operation and speed, was that it was easily transported and worked well at sea under almost any conditions.



Hillis
. . . point proved

"It will pump out flooded holds or dry holds, pump from seine nets to the hold, from a fishing boat to a packer or barge and from vessel to shore. It's relatively very cheap and it can mean the difference betwen life and death.

"In the 1975 herring season, several boats went down with their crews because they were overloaded. My pump could have stopped some of those sinkings and in 1976, it did."

Hillis, 45, of 2067 Cedar Hill Cross Road, has also invented a machine clearing lakes of weeds which has been demonstrated in Greater Victoria.

Razzell said Monday's demonstration did not prove the device because the herring were pumped a vertical distance of about 12 feet. Twice that height would have to be negotiated at a higher dock or a low tide.

He said his disagreement with Hillis was that he hadn't produced a pump that would handle fish quickly and without damaging them.

The pump works through suction produced by pumping water into the pickup pipe at a pressure of 200 pounds a square inch and, unlike some pumps, it operates well with a mixture of fish, water and air.

In a parting shot at his critics in the fisheries department, Hillis raised the discharge nozzle off his pump about 25 feet in the air and shot a stream of herring into the Fraser River.

"That doesn't prove he could do it with more herring and less air," Razzell said.

The seagulls, however, were delighted.

Scientists buzz ... it's the water

MUNICH (Reuter) — West German scientists have found signs of water vapor in a distant galaxy and say they believe environmental conditions similar to those on earth exist elsewhere in space.

The Max Planck Institute said Tuesday an international team of astronomers at its giant radio telescope in Bad Muenstereifel have found evidence of water in the so-called spiral nebula M-33, which is 2.2 million light years away from earth.

The institute said it is the first water vapor cloud ever discovered outside our own galaxy.

It said the discovery strengthened a theory that similar physical conditions existed in galaxies other than our own.

"One can therefore expect planets which revolve around a sun and perhaps have even developed similar environmental conditions," the institute said.

'Provincial thinking narrow'

Vander Zalm 'ignorant' on Quebec—nationalist

If Quebec goes its own way much of the blame can be placed on the "remarkable ignorance" of people like B.C. Human Resources Minister William Vander Zalm and the apathy of Canadians as a whole, crusading nationalist Mel Hurtig said this week.

"I'm appalled at the remarkable ignorance of the recent statements of Vander Zalm," the Edmonton publisher told a luncheon meeting of the Men's Canadian Club of Victoria.

Lumping Vander Zalm with those who would like to see Canada turned into a system of balkanized states, Hurtig said: "Canada is already the most decentralized country of any industrial democracy today."

Yet people like Vander Zalm want to take more power away from Ottawa, while denying at the same time the plea of municipalities for more say in their own affairs, he said.

During an interview, Hurtig included the cabinet minister with those he accuses of "narrow provincial" thinking and "bigotry."

The attack on Vander Zalm came a day after Opposition Leader David Barrett had referred to his anti-Quebec remarks as "lame-brain."

Hurtig, one of the founders of the Committee for an Independent Canada, said bigotry was being fed by such distasteful events as the highly successful sale in Vancouver of T-shirts carrying the picture of a beaver strangling a frog.

He blamed political leaders and "newspaper people" for not taking a stand against such practices.

Hurtig used his favorite topic — foreign investment — as a means of emphasizing the threat to Confederation. Repeating alarming figures from earlier speeches about American takeover of business and land, he said most Canadians didn't seem to care.

The future of the country remained in doubt, he said, "when every day you're selling off your land and your industry, and every day you fail to teach your young people the history of your country and the values of your country."

Quebec, he said, could not be expected to feel strongly about the future of Canada when it sees the other provinces being sold out to foreign interests, and sees "a total absence of feeling as a whole."

The time has come, Hurtig warned, when people everywhere "should get off their rear ends and do something to help save this country."

Referring to the gradual loss of large land tracts to U.S. interests, Hurtig said: "Just answer me this simple question — tell me what is going to be left to your children?

"If you continue with your apathy in allowing this country to be bought up, the opportunity of Canadians to dream the Canadian dream — to dream the dream of Sir John A. Macdonald — will have passed, and Canada will literally have reached the point of no return."

Man found guilty in medicine theft

A 29-year-old man was found guilty Tuesday in Victoria county court of breaking and entering and theft Dec. 12 at Turnbull's Pharmacy, 900 Esquimalt Road.

Richard William Stewart, 521 Foster, will be sentenced by Judge Peter Millward Feb. 8 after he receives a pre-sentence report.

The theft involved an 80-ounce bottle of prescription cough medicine.

The judge said he had "no hesitation" in finding Stewart did break and enter the pharmacy and steal the cough medicine.

He rejected the defence of drunkenness to the point of inability to form specific intent to commit the crime, saying he found "no evidence whatever to satisfy me or to indicate strongly that the accused did not know what he was doing."

Court was told Stewart broke the front door, removed jagged pieces of glass, went into the pharmacy and emerged with the cough medicine bottle. He was apprehended by police a short time later.

A 29-year-old man who failed to appear for his trial Oct. 6 made a brief appearance before Judge M. L. T. Drake after being arrested earlier in Nanaimo.

Kenneth Moorhouse is accused of escaping from Wilkinson Road jail Dec. 16, 1975. He was freed from jail on a habeas corpus application April 29, 1976.

A trial date will be set later.

Charred totems may be saved

Provincial conservator Philip Ward said Tuesday he would be going to the Queen Charlotte Islands in a few weeks to assess damage to seven totem poles charred in a fire last week near Skidegate.

He said that from discussions with Queen Charlotte Islands Museum curator Trisha Gessler, it appeared the poles had been charred all over, but not deeply.

"We may be able to do something," Ward said, adding that restoration, if it were possible, would be "a unique problem in my experience."

The poles, originally from long-deserted Haida villages, had been returned to the Charlottes less than a year ago from the Provincial Museum. They burned in an early-morning fire in a shed located near the Charlottes museum.

If a restoration attempt were made it would be a long time before it was known whether it would work, Ward said. "We would have to try to devise something new."

U.S. charges Delta man

DELTA, B.C. (CP) — Carl Hinke, a resident of this municipality south of Vancouver who took out Canadian citizenship about 1½ years ago, said Monday he had been ordered to appear in Newark, N.J., court Feb. 1 to face a charge of refusing to register for the United States draft.

THERE'S TWO WAYS TO LOOK AT HONDA'S TOP MILEAGE NUMBERS.

1. LEAST CENTS PER MILE.*

Fill up a Honda Civic CVCC. It'll take Regular gas. The good news is you can probably top the tank for less than $8.00. The bad news: gas prices are going up.

With gas costed at 90¢ a gallon, according to the Transport Canada fuel economy figures, you can keep the popular Honda Civic Sedan or Hatchback in gasoline for about 2.1¢ per mile. The Station Wagon for 2.3¢ per mile, the best of any 5-door wagon. The CVCC for 1.7¢ per mile, and nobody's topped that figure. The remarkable Accord needs 1.95¢ per lovely mile.

Your nearby Honda dealer has some other figures you'll like. A price that's a sight for sore eyes. And some eye-popping space statistics. See him soon.

2. MOST MILES PER GALLON.*

Of all figures released by Transport Canada, the 1977 Honda Civic CVCC and Honda Accord achieved the highest gas mileage. Both are 5-speed hatchbacks, and fifth gear gives them boosts in mileage by dropping rpm's while cruising.

The actual figures:

CVCC: 47 city, 62 highway, 53 combined.

Accord: 30 city, 58 highway, 46 combined.

Nobody did better than that.

But that's only one way to look at fuel economy.

M. V. Chesnut's Garden Notes

In my younger days, the fortunes of business caused me to be transferred for a period of duty to Saskatchewan, and while we felt at first as if we were being exiled to Siberia, actually we enjoyed our stay in prairie country.

For one thing, the folks were so outgoing and friendly. We were on a first-name basis with our neighbors within a week. And while the winters were hard to take and the growing season very short, the heavy prairie soil was incredibly fertile; my wife still insists that the vegetables from our Regina garden were the tastiest we ever grew. What we missed the most, though, were the trees, and I vowed that I would plant trees until they were coming out my ears if and when we ever got back to B.C.

A lack of trees makes commonplace and dull a plot which would otherwise acquire grace and beauty, yet the misuse of trees has ruined many a promising scene. The worst form of misuse is, of course, the common fault of overcrowding, which leads inevitably to the day when a lovely tree must be mutilated with pruning shears and saw.

In choosing trees for your garden, it is wise to keep in mind the architectural form or shape of the tree, the beauty of its foliage and the happy effect of its shadow pattern on the lawn. These points are really more important than the blossoms, for the flowering period for even the most showy flowering trees is very short, while the foliage is with you throughout the growing season, while the architectural form can delight the eye the whole year through.

There are four basic shapes in trees. The standard tree is one with a single trunk and a spreading head. A bush tree forks at or near the ground level, with two or more main stems. The fastigiate or columnar tree is slim, with upraised branches, and of course, the weeping tree is a drooper.

The standard and bush trees take up the most room, although a graceful three-stemmed silver birch can be fitted into a pretty small garden. The fastigiate tree is ideal for the garden of limited area, for it is very slim for its height and gives an interesting architectural effect. Too many of them, though, make for a sombre, funereal effect; this goes for the weepers too — it is easy to overdo it.

Fastigiate trees immediately bring to mind the conifers and, as these are green all year round, they play an important part in garden design.

Fletcher's and Elwood's cypress are probably the best known and both are grand trees, although I have some slight preference for a cousin called chamaecyparis lawsoniana erecta viridis. The Irish juniper is another superb columnar tree.

There are plenty of columnar trees which are not conifers, of course. One only has to think of the Lombardy poplar, although poplars are definitely not for the small garden — their roots are very invasive.

The best of the fastigiates, for my money, is a lovely Japanese flowering cherry called amanagowa, making a slim pillar of blush pink blossoms in spring. Not so often seen is the fastigiate hawthorn, crataegus monogyna stricta, a quick-growing pillar tree and a particularly happy choice for a very small garden. Strathmore and Van Eseltine are flowering crabapples with a columnar habit of growth.

We have more weeping trees than you can shake a stick at, and the most commonly planted is the weeping willow. I may be prejudiced, but I have never been able to warm up to this tree — the thing reminds me too much of cemeteries. The weeping birches are better, particularly the cut-leaf variety which gives a lacy, graceful effect. The weeping silver lime (tilia) is probably the most beautiful of all the larger kinds.

For a smaller weeping tree, my choice again would be from the family of Japanese flowering cherries, particularly shidare sakura, which bears double rose-pink blossoms. An uncommon small weeper which bears a crinoline of scarlet beads in autumn is cotoneaster hybrida pendula — actually a shrub, but trained in the form of a small weeping tree.

Super Sunday XI has come and gone, engulfing us all and leaving us empty and spent, like seashells on a beach at low tide. But I think I saw signs this time that Super Bowl worship has passed its peak, and will not, after all, overtake fundamentalism as the ascendant religion in the United States today.

Super Sunday still gets a better press than Easter, though, and last week its organs of publicity drowned out, for the time being, the Doomsday sayers who warn us daily, in an ever more urgent chorus, that Jesus is coming, and Judgment Day.

The signs of Super Sunday's decline were tiny, to be sure: An irreverent word, an unconscious act of apostasy, a hollow methaphor, an omission of ritual; and finally, when it was over, a feeling more akin to post-coital depression than religious exaltation.

Somehow the whole experience, orgiastic and pervasive as it was, especially for us in Los Angeles, at ground zero, lacked the intensity and grandeur of an earlier Super Bowl whose number I have forgotten but which seems to me now to have been the high tide of the Super Sunday phenomenon. That was the game that raised Super Sunday out of the realm of sports and placed it among the great experiences of mortal and God-fearing humanity, along with Easter itself. For the first time, they called it Super Sunday, and a congregation of 60 million, momentarily checked their lust and fervor while a clergyman delivered an invocation entirely in the jargon of the gridiron. I doubt if any prayer ever spoken, anywhere, at any time in history, was ever heard by more human beings, including the one that launched the Normandy invasion.

At that point Super Sunday was religio-patriotic, drawing power from both the Supreme Being and the Flag to heighten the emotions and seal the commitment of the faithful. No sooner was the invocation over than The Star Spangled Banner was rendered, and with God and country in their hearts the players took the field. But after a fortnight of the most unrelenting evangelism, the game itself could only be a disappointment, and, as I remember, it was.

This time, though, I caught that very note of disenchantment from one of NBC's reporters in advance of the game. "So much passion goes into the foreplay," he told 70 million of us in what must have been a momentary lapse of network dogma, as well as taste, "that the game is an anti-climax."

He was right, of course, but I suspect that in drawning a methaphor from the lexicon of erotic love, rather than patriotism and religion, he was betraying an unconscious suspicion that football, after all, was just a sport.

Another insight into the new skepticism came from one of the players in a pre-game interview: "Finally," an NBC reporter had asked him solemnly, "what really will decide the outcome of this game?"

"I think," said the player, "it will be the score."

It was seemingly a typical question and answer in the week of interviews in which the beleaguered players were subjected to every kind of interrogation but x-rays and a search of their body cavities. What made it extraordinary, though, was the player's answer, because he was kidding. It was sacrilege. He had answered a vapid question in about the only honest way it could be answered. He had flouted scripture. He had eschewed the catechism and spoken the truth. Thus are great temples tumbled.

If there had been no other clues, however, the pre-game ritual itself would have given adequate witness to the decline of Super Sunday. Not only was there no invocation, but they didn't even render The Star Spangled Banner before the kickoff. Instead, the earthy Vicki Carr sang America the Beautiful. The significance of that change of theme from bursting bombs to fruitful plains cannot be overstated.

What I think might have been the most significant sign of all, though, was my own detachment. My chair is by the picture window overlooking our back yard, and most of the time I found myself turning from the game to watch the birds. The fountain was full of rainwater and I had just filled the feeder, and the birds were putting on a circus. There were as many as 30 of them at a time — bathing and fighting over the birdseed: Scrub jays, spotted doves, brown towhees, linnets, and suddenly, a lovely pair of goldfinches. They were the first goldfinches we'd had in our yard for years, and I was quite excited. I got up and went into the den and got the bird book to verify the identification.

"You just missed a Minnesota touchdown," said my friend Dalton, who always comes to our house for Super Sunday.

By that time I had lost contact with the game. All I know is that the final score was Oakland 32, Minnesota 14; and as far as I'm concerned, that determined the outcome.

Maybe I've just lost faith because the Rams failed to ascend again. Maybe the Doomsday sayers are right, after all, and we'll see Jesus in the Super Bowl before we see the Rams.

By George, come to think of it, what a great place Super Bowl XII would be for the Second Coming!

Thoughts at large:

It occurs to me that, for the first time in some 40 years of driving a car, I actually have a pair of gloves in the "glove compartment."

Groups dedicated to eliminating prejudice are doomed to failure, for most people must have something to look down on, or to blame, as a scapegoat for their frustrations; the blaming instinct in humans seems as universal and ineradicable as vanity.

'Don't ask workers alone to bear inflation cost'

MONTREAL (CP) — The Quebec Federation of Labor is prepared to do its part to help control inflation in Quebec's post-controls period, federation president Louis Laberge said this week.

"We are ready to discuss measures which attack the real causes of inflation," he told a news conference.

It was fine to ask workers to make sacrifices like any other group, he said, "but there is no longer any question of making workers alone pay the cost of inflation."

Laberge was reacting to a statement by Premier Rene Levesque, who said the provincial cabinet hoped to hold discussions with unions, employers and other groups in an effort to hold down inflation without formal wage and price controls.

Laberge said the Quebec government's decision to take away most of the power of the provincial anti-inflation board constitued a fatal blow for the federal price and wage control program.

He said the Trudeau government should end all control measures, since under present circumstances the federal controls discriminate against workers in Quebec's private sector.

Levesque has said "it wouldn't be a bad idea" for Ottawa to end its controls as soon as possible.

Last week, the Parti Quebecois government stripped the Quebec inflation-control board of most of its power, making it a purely advisory body. The government will honor recent contract settlements with more than 300,000 Quebec public servants and construction workers which exceed anti-inflation guidelines.

"Now that construction workers and public service employees are free from unjust controls, workers in the private sector are still subjected to federal controls," said Laberge.

"The federation hopes that at the next finance ministers conference; the Levesque government will demand that the federal government lift the wage controls."

The federation had always maintained that measures adopted by the federal Liberal government and the former Quebec Liberal government had not attacked the real causes of inflation, Laberge said.

"For us the crucial problem now in Quebec is unemployment and this is what our first priority should be."

Defence move delays hearing

VANCOUVER (CP) — A move by the defence has resulted in a delay in the trial of Eloise Roads Wilson, 49, of Victoria and Crofton, charged with murder in the Dec. 2, 1975, death of a Shaughnessy Heights recluse.

Lawyer Robert Gardner, representing Wilson, told Mr. Justice Allan Macfarlane of the B.C. Supreme Court Monday that the attorney-general's office has approved the exhumation of the body of Eunice Coote, the mother of Marion Hamilton, 69. Hamilton is the alleged victim in the present case.

The court granted an adjournment in the murder trial, which was scheduled to begin Jan. 24.

Mrs. Coote was found dead March 18, 1975, in the same house where her daughter's body was found.

"Mrs. Coote died while she was in the custody of Mrs. Hamilton, the alleged victim," said Gardner, who described the circumstances as unusual and noted no autopsy had been performed and no inquest had been held.

He said he had retained a pathologist who was prepared to conduct an autopsy on Mrs. Coote's body, adding that he will apply for an inquest into the woman's death.

Gardner said in an interview that the pathologist will be looking for evidence of foul play in Mrs. Coote's death.

He stressed that his client was not living at the Shaughnessy address when Mrs. Coote died. The accused spent two or three days a week caring for Mrs. Hamilton.

Gardner said it was the first time in B.C. that an exhumation has been authorized because of a private intervention.

Six trekkers on way to Alaska

WINNIPEG (CP) — Six Michigan men on a 3,000-mile snowmobile trip to Alaska have reached Sandy Lake, Ont., about 260 miles northeast of Winnipeg, and expect to cross the border into Manitoba today.

Charles Lumsden of the air transport division of the Hudson's Bay Company here said he talked with expedition vice-commander Larry Kiffner Monday morning and was told the men were in good shape.

However, he said they were awaiting spare parts to fix their machines before proceeding.

The group has covered about 200 miles since it left Pickle Lake, Ont., Jan. 4. The next stop is Island Lake, Man., about 80 air miles further northwest.

Lumsden said the men had found travel more difficult than they expected because of slush.

Other members of the group are commander Lester Wolfe, Gerry Lounds, Edgar Whitnep, Allan Sevener and Ken Smith.

New milk pitchers mostly bad news for consumers

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

The B.C. president of the Consumers' Association of Canada has a little good news and more bad news about plastic "pitcher-pak" milk bags that will appear in stores next Monday.

Jean Douglas of Vancouver has misgivings about the plan by dairies in Greater Victoria to phase out the three-quart (3.4-litre) plastic-coated cardboard carton and replace it with a plastic bag that will hold three bags of 1 1-3 litres each, or a total of four litres of milk.

Her questions to dairy processors at an open-house publicity affair in Vancouver last week sponsored by the B.C. Dairy Foundation had not been adequately answered, she told the Colonist in a phone interview.

Mrs. Douglas said she was "dismayed" that the new, supposedly cheaper containers of milk would not be cheaper than their plastic-covered-cardboard counterparts.

She also wanted to know why a public relations spokesman at the open house assured her that plastic pitchers required to hold the bags were dishwasher safe, although the words "dishwasher safe" did not appear on the pitchers.

"It's fishy. From a commonsense point of view, it doesn't make sense. A year ago the dairy industry in B.C. said it would turn to plastic because the pulp market was too high. A plastic container would be cheaper to make. Now the plastics are too expensive," she said, "and the new containers will not be any cheaper than the old."

Mrs. Douglas said a spokesman told her at the open house that the amount of plastic used to coat a three-quart carton could make three of the 1 1-3-litre bags. She doubts these figures, and points out that the bags have a thickness of three mils, one of the new containers' good points.

Dairy representatives at the open house "just hated me," she said. "I kept asking these questions, and all they wanted me to do was eat and drink and be impressed like everybody else."

Nutritionists are concerned that vitamin D in "pitcher-pak" milk will be destroyed if the bags are left out in the light, she said.

Victoria dairy spokesmen said Friday the 1 1-3-litre plastic bags would let in about as much light as the old glass bottle, although the overwrap might be colored to keep out any extra light.

Mrs. Douglas said dairy spokesmen told her a four-litre carton would be a "monster," difficult to handle. Then why not produce two two-litre cartons in a case? she asked.

She told the Colonist the plastic bags would not affect the taste of the milk. "We tried some and there's no problem there," she said.

She said the bags dripped down the side into the pitcher if poured too slowly, by a child, for example, or if the hole wasn't cut properly.

She doesn't believe the bags — the three 1⅓-litre bags and the larger overwrap — will break down as a biodegradable waste. Although Victoria dairy spokesmen said the smaller bags could be cleaned out and used as sandwich bags and the overwrap used as a "dandy kitchen refuse bag," Mrs. Douglas disagreed.

She thinks the bags, in the long run, will only be another problem added to the rubbish heap of environmental problems.

She also fears the bags may release harmful chemicals if burned in a fireplace.

On the lighter side, dairy spokesmen in Victoria say the price of milk per glass will remain the same. Any extra charge in the price of the four-litre container will reflect the fact that four litres is a greater volume than three quarts.

Spokesman said eastern Canadians had been buying their milk in bags for about 10 years. Eastern Canadians also have a choice between cartons and returnable plastic jugs.

Greater Victoria dairies — Dairyland, Island Farms, Palm Dairies and Silverwood — said smaller-sized cartons of milk would continue to be sold at grocery stores and by home delivery.

According to one dairy spokesman, some dairies in eastern Canada give free plastic pitchers to customers on their home-delivery routes, "but that's not saying it will happen here."

At their introductory rate, the pitchers will cost consumers about 35 cents each.

Dribbles, doubts, but no hike in price

309 IN MEMORIAM

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD. AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.
WITH GRATITUDE. SANDS

EDINGTON — In loving memory of my dear daughter Mary (Maisie) who passed away suddenly January 19th, 1976.
The flowers I place upon your grave,
May wither and decay,
But love for you who sleeps beneath
Will never fade away.
—Fondly remembered, Mother Grace O'Connor

EDINGTON — In loving memory of our mother Mary Edington who passed away Jan. 19, 1976.
Our lovely Mummy,
How we miss you.
—Richard and Colleen, U.S.A.

EDINGTON — In loving memory of Mary who passed away one year ago today.
"Time will never cloud your lovely smile
My thoughts are with you all the while."
—God Bless, deepest love, your sister Peggy, Cheltenham, England.
"Memory is the only thing
That grief can call its own.

308-A CARDS OF THANKS

Amateur leagues rap Jays

TORONTO (CP) — Local amateur baseball officials are annoyed that their organizations will get no compensation for three pitchers signed recently by Toronto Blue Jays.

"Most teams in our league have to scrape just to keep going," said Howie Birnie, president of the Leaside junior league which has lost Bob Oravec, Remo Cardinale and Tom Dejak to the American League expansion club.

"It's not just the Blue Jays. We have never gotten anything from the teams that signed our players."

Peter Bavasi, general manager of the Blue Jays, says his club will not single out amateur teams or leagues for direct aid. However, he said the Blue Jays will give very strong support to any bid by the Ontario Baseball Association or Canadian Federation of Amateur Baseball for funds from the major leagues' amateur fund.

The OBA plans to make a formal request for major-league aid in 1978. The majors already have spent their 1977 funds.

Graluates of the Leaside league include relief ace John Hiller of Detroit Tigers and Ron Tayler, who made World Series relief appearances for New York Mets and St. Louis Cardinals.

Birnie said the only time his league got any money for developing a player was when pitcher Mike Kilkenny donated part of the money he got for signing with Detroit.

Jack Wilson, general manager of the High Park Baseball Association, sounded almost bitter about the way the Jays handled the signing of Dejak who played last season with a team in Wilson's association.

"They didn't even have the courtesy to call me," he said. "I found out Dejak had been signed when I read about it in the paper.

"When a hockey player is signed, his last junior team is compensated, and every one of his former teams right down to bantam gets a little bit.

"The Jays can come in here and lay hands on our boys without having to spend a cent. They take the boy away and don't give a nickel back."

Law profession closer to Duncan community

DUNCAN — The recently-elected bar association president, Don Taylor, says the legal profession locally has made a conscious effort to become more involved with the community in the past couple of years and plans to be more involved in the future.

The 28-year-old lawyer, who has been practising for almost four years in Duncan, was elected two weeks ago by his 24 counterparts in the city to succeed barrister and solicitor David Wright.

Taylor told the Colonist that the law profession generally has possibly failed to communicate with the public in the past, and as a result of this was not looked upon too highly by some people.

"The basic nature of the profession, that is dealing with issues which can be contentious, is bound to generate some ill-feeling at times toward lawyers.

"The profession is beginning to realize this and locally we are making an effort to dispel this."

A recent example of the Duncan Bar Association's involvement was a free program through Malaspina College last fall called Layman and the Law.

Malaspina College has asked the Duncan bar to conduct the program again this fall and the Duncan president said he was pleased with the response.

Asked if he felt such a program might entice the layman to conduct his legal affairs without the advice of a lawyer, Taylor said the profession didn't feel threatened by this.

"We have nothing to fear from a populace that is more aware of their legal rights . . . actually the opposite is possibly the case," he said.

Another community function the profession is highly involved in its legal aid to those who cannot afford the usual legal services.

Taylor said the Duncan Bar Association now was handling more than 500 free interviews a year.

He said the association was also studying the idea of an annual scholarship to students in the Cowichan Valley, who needed financial assitance.

"We can never completely dispel the criticism of our profession by some. However, we are making an effort to counter this with more available information and community involvement."

Taylor
. . . more involved

Taylor said the series of seminars co-ordinated by another local lawyer, Brian McDaniel, was well-attended and beneficial not only to the layman, but also to the lawyers who participated in the lectures.

"The profession itself benefitted because it gave the layman a greater understanding of what we are faced with, and we also developed an understanding of some of the apprehensions of a layman when he is considering seeking legal advice," Taylor stated.

Soccer star shot to death

ROME (AP) — Italian soccer star Luciano Re Cecconi was shot to death Tuesday night in an ill-fated joke after entering a jewelry store and saying it was a holdup, police said.

They said the 28-year-old midfielder with Lazio of Rome walked into the shop with a team-mate and a friend and told jeweller Bruno Tabacchini: "Hands up."

Tabacchini, 44, pulled a gun from a drawer and opened fire, killing the player, police said. Re Cecconi was hit in the chest and died on his way to hospital.

Re Cecconi was one of Italy's best known soccer stars. He played for Lazio when it won the Italian major league title in 1974 and was a member of the Italian team at the world championships in West Germany that same year.

No answer given on Pharmacare

Human Resources Minister William Vander Zalm Tuesday avoided answering questions on the possibility of $25 deductible being charged all users of prescription drugs in B.C.

The throne speech has promised universal pharmacare for all citizens, but so far no details on the formula have been made public.

Gordon Gibson (L — North Vancouver-Capilano) asked Vander Zalm if it was true that a $25 deductible charge was being considered. The minister replied that details of the program would be made available after the budget was introduced in about a week.

Gibson
. . . asks again

Speaking in the throne speech debate after the question period, Gibson re-introduced his question, noting Vander Zalm's reluctance to reply.

Gibson told the house he ing for any details of the proposed legislation. "I was just asking if the present system of providing free prescription drugs for those in need will be continued," he said. "I feel that the very fact that the minister would not reply indicates that changes are planned."

Vander Zalm gave no indication whether Gibson was right or wrong, and declined to state the government's intentions.

Gibson told the house he was generally satisfied with some of the items listed in the throne speech.

"I'm happy to see the promise of an ombudsman renewed," he said, "but I just hope the powers of his office are expanded to include the municipal field, where many inequities take place."

Gibson also took a dig at the Grizzly Valley share trading affair, saying he hoped promised conflict-of-interest legislation "has enough teeth to bite back at the Grizzly bears, so to speak."

He complimented the government on its promise of free camping for the elderly, but asked that it do "something far more meaningful, like giving all senior citizens the right to obtain passes on Hydro buses."

Gibson also asked the government to do more than just introduce legislation to make it possible for independent schools to receive financial aid.

"I like the promise, but I would prefer to see the aid immediate," he said.

The lone Liberal in the Legislature also called on the government to consider redistribution of wealth in B.C., but he didn't say how it could be done.

"We have a completely unacceptable distribution of wealth in B.C.," Gibson said. "Around 20 per cent of the population controls more than 40 per cent of all the wealth. Income simply must be distributed on a more equitable basis."

Gibson was more positive on his ideas for reducing unemployment.

"Direct stimulation is not an option I like," he said, "but the time has come when direct stimulation must be applied by the government to reduce the ranks of the unemployed."

He said the flow of provincial dollars into various projects could create 10,000 jobs.

"That isn't much when there are more than 100,000 out of work," he said, "but it's a start.

"In the middle and long run, the government must stabilize activity and be predictable. The last administration was unpredictable and the present government hasn't been too predictable so far."

'Shameful attitude' toward elderly ill

The Social Credit government won a little praise Tuesday from Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay), and a hefty dose of criticism for its "shameful" attitude toward the elderly.

The former New Democratic Party administration didn't escape Wallace's wrath as he lambasted both governments for discriminating against the elderly sick.

"I am sure the elderly bedridden residents of our nursing homes who fail to qualify for extended care and are spending their life savings at $900 a month just to stay alive are overjoyed that they can now have free use of government campsites," Wallace said during debate on the throne speech. "What a mockery of the very word priority!"

The lone Tory in the house said the most glaring distortion of government priorities came in the decision to push forward a universal pharmacare program.

And yet, he said, in the entire speech there was no mention of programs to relieve the plight of the chronically ill.

"If we could afford all of these programs they would have my support," Wallace said, "but until the shameful discrimination against our elderly citizens in nursing homes is ended, there is no way I can support government funding of needs which are less urgent and where the funding will reach people who really do not require the money in the first place."

"The former administration, Wallace said, had been equally callous when dealing with the elderly.

"They showed the same disregard for this group of senior citizens by peddling subsidized government car insurance when their first responsibility was to ensure fair and equitable assistance to all citizens requiring hospital care, regardless of the age of the patient, the diagnosis, or where the care was provided."

Wallace said he could only wish "a plague on both your houses—or perhaps I should be less polite and say a pox on both your houses."

The provincial Conservative party leader also called on the government to re-institute the system of two legislative sessions a year.

"A province with all the current problems of B.C. and a budget close to $4 billion not only deserves but must have two sessions each year if the process of governing is to be responsible," Wallace said.

He added that he feared if the current session dragged on into the summer months "members will become less efficient, less tolerant, more irritable and less productive," to the detriment of all British Columbians.

Wallace was sharply critical of the government for permitting B.C. Hydro to raise its electricity rates without protest.

"This government has not only geen irresponsible by raising expectations it could not satisfy; it has been equally derelict by applying the principles of wage control to the labor force while allowing crown corporations such as B.C. Hydro to impose three rate increases accumulating to an average of 60 per cent within two years."

The Oak Bay member said he would like to see the government at least "look at the possibility of a tax cut to spark the economy."

Must ICBC obey rights laws?

The question of whether the Insurance industry must comply with human rights legislation is soon to be decided by a board of inquiry.

The board is to rule on a complaint by Robert Heerspink, 2461 Amelia, Victoria, that the Insurance Corp. of B.C. refused him a service without reasonable cause.

The contention of ICBC, made to the provincial human rights branch, was that the Human Rights Code did not have jurisdiction over the insurance industry.

Heerspink said ICBC refused home property insurance to him on the grounds that he had been charged with possession of and trafficking in marijuana.

"This case raises an important issue that has been questioned right across the country," Human Rights Director Kathleen Ruff commented.

"The question is whether the insurance industry has to comply with human rights legislation.

"It will be an interesting case, that will be watched across Canada."

No date has yet been set for the board of inquiry to meet.

Downtown thermometer registers 21 in early afternoon

West basks

Warmest Jan. 18 ever official 13, unofficial 21

It's not official, but the temperature in downtown Victoria hit a summery 21 degrees Celsius at about 3 p.m. Tuesday afternoon. That's what registered on thermometers downtown and the Cablevision weather scanner.

But even officially, the weather office says record highs were set at Pat Bay (13.3 degrees compared with the previous Jan. 18 high of 12.2 degrees in 1956) and at the Gonzales observatory, where the mercury hit 14.1 degrees.

The shirtsleeves 21-degree figure came from both a revolving thermometer at the Royal Trust building at Douglas and View and from Channel 10 cable's sensor.

A quick tour around Greater Victoria Tuesday afternoon brought glimpses of joggers down to T-shirts and shorts, a girl cyclist in a halter top, a sailboat out in Beaver Lake, a couple of hunters training their dogs — and unconfirmed reports of someone shooting ducks on Panama flats.

And although ewes are reporting lambing early on the Saanich Peninsula, the weatherman warns it's far too early for a young man's fancy to turn to love.

"Don't start talking spring yet, or you'll really bring it down on us," he said Tuesday night.

However, U.S. weather officials said the 30-day outlook for this area indicates continuing mild weather.

A cool front that passed through Washington state Tuesday morning permitted clearing and an intake of warm Pacific air to bathe most of Vancouver Island in Hawaiian-style warmth.

We can still feel smug about the weather compared with the deep-freeze which has eastern Canada and much of the Atlantic United States in the worst winter grip for years, but the weatherman isn't optimistic for more sunshine today.

A cool front that headed in late Tuesday night was expected to bring a low of 5, with mild cloudy weather today, followed by rain and drizzle this afternoon.

Thursday's weather forecast calls for showers. Rain in the 24 hours to 11 p.m. Monday amounted to 39.2 mm, nearly an inch and a half.

Fuel crimp adds woes

Associated Press

Energy conservation, a theme from the days of oil embargoes, was a stark reality to many in the midwestern and eastern regions of the United States on Tuesday as severe winter cold maintained its grip.

Record-breaking low temperatures clogged navigable waterways with ice, severely hampering traffic on such widespread transportation lanes as the Ohio, Mississippi and Thames rivers and the Great Lakes.

Ice floes were as high as 12 feet in some parts of the Mississippi River near St. Louis, officials reported.

Mel Doernhoefer, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's corps of engineers, said: "When you consider that 60 per cent of the millions of tons of cargo that move past St. Louis each year is fossil fuel—coal, fuel oil or gas—you have to believe that some power plants and factories up the Illinois River toward Chicago are going to be hurting soon."

Similar conditions on the Ohio River already have forced cuts in power production and industry as far east as Pennsylvania. Portions of the Ohio were frozen solid, for the first time since 1948, officials said.

Pennsylvania Lt.-Gov. Ernest Kline declared a state of emergency Monday. He said his chief concern was a critical natural gas delivery problem in the western part of the state.

Officials of the three gas companies that supply the area's 750,000 customers said they have sufficient supplies of gas, but pressure in the pipeline delivery system cannot be maintained under the demand for fuel.

The company executives met Tuesday to decide when schools might be reopened and when 300 industries—including steel plants—might expect renewed delivery. Their best estimate was next week.

School closings also brought tragedy when four children, who normally would have been in school, were killed in a Springfield, Mo., house fire.

Hydro 'out of control'

Debt will soon exceed total budget of B.C.

House leader of the New Democratic Party William King (Revelstoke-Slocan) said Tuesday night he thought B.C. Hydro was now completely out of the control of politicians in the Legislature.

King made the statement outside the chamber after the Legislature was asked to approve a bill increasing the borrowing power of Hydro from $3.5 billion to $4.150 billion, an increase of $650 million over present borrowing limits.

The bill will be debated later in the session.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said the increased borrowing power was required to meet anticipated capital costs of Hydro over the next year, to meet increasing energy requirements.

King said he was concerned that the total indebtedness of Hydro would then exceed the total B.C. budget if the bill was approved. The current budget for the 1976-77 fiscal year totals $3.6 billion.

"I'm afraid the bureaucracy within Hydro is too strong," King said. "They are perpetuating that bureaucracy by projecting ever-increasing power loads. I'm afraid they are completely out of control."

King said there was a remarkable difference between the energy predictions of Hydro and the energy predictions made by the B.C. Energy Commission.

"It seems to me that the time has come when Hydro can no longer be trusted to make its own energy requirement predictions," King said. "It should no longer be allowed to set its own targets. We must have an independent body like the energy commission to set the targets.

"The Hydro debt load is becoming, in fact will soon become, too heavy for the people of this province to carry."

Premier Bennett doesn't share that view. He said it had to be remembered with Hydro that it had "tremendous assets" to cover its indebtedness.

Insiders' windfalls from ICBC salvage

By PAUL BENNETT
Colonist Reporter

No clear guidelines exist for the disposal of at least $100,000 worth of non-automotive salvage by the Insurance Corp. of B.C. each year, the Colonist has learned.

Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) said he intended to investigate the possibility of conflict of interest by ICBC employees owing to the "ridiculous" lack of guidelines.

He will place written questions on the Legislature order paper as a start to his investigation.

ICBC's policy for the disposal of goods ranging from boats through furniture to bicycles does not require advertising or otherwise making public the fact the goods are available, according to an ICBC official.

"In the case of a large item like a recovered stolen boat, we might advertise it," the official said, "but it's just not worth it for most items."

Here the procedure is simply that ICBC clerks phone people they think might be interested, such as second-hand dealers, and let them know what will be up for grabs.

Tanker snaps in half, three seamen missing

MIDWAY ISLAND (UPI) — A U.S. Coast Guard search plane scanned the Pacific Tuesday in search of three men missing after a Liberian tanker broke in half 200 miles southeast of Midway Island, dumping its cargo of 950 tons of fuel oil in a huge brown patch 10 miles wide and 15 miles long across the tropical waters.

The fate of three men, stranded on the bow section of the tanker Irenes Challenger when she split in two late Monday night, was unknown. Twenty-eight others aboard the tanker were rescued from the aft section by the Pacific Arrow, a Japanese freighter.

The three missing crewmen were seen alive board their floating half of the ship late Monday night, but at dawn they were no longer seen, and the fore section was up-ended.

Egyptians rioting over prices

CAIRO (AP) — Thousands of Egyptians angered by government-ordered price increases rioted in Cairo and the port city of Alexandria Tuesday night, stoning police, setting fire to police stations and denouncing President Anwar Sadat amid chants of "Nasser, Nasser, Nasser."

Gamal Abdel Nasser, Sadat's late predecessor, was popular with the peasants and the urban poor, the group hardest hit by the price increases.

Legionnaire disease pinned down at last

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — A bacterium-like organism previously unknown as a human killer caused the Legionnaires' Disease which killed 29 persons in Philadelphia, Pa. last summer, the national Centre for Disease Control announced Tuesday.

The organism, which the CDC called a bacterium for purposes of identification, was isolated from lung tissue of one of the victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, which struck 151 other persons who eventually recovered. Most of the victims were members of the American Legion attending a convention at a Philadelphia hotel.

The CDC said it was not known how the victims contracted the disease.

"In the routine process of making sure we had not missed a rickettsia, we found the bacterium," said Dr. Joseph McDade, a research microbiologist who isolated the organism.

A rickettsia is an organism between bacterium and virus on the biologic scale.

"It appears to be something we've never associated with human illness," McDade said.

Researchers said the disease caused by the organism, which has no name, was apparently not contagious.

"You know whether a disease is contagious or not by whether or not it spreads among the patients' contacts," said Dr. Charles Shepard, chief of the leprosy and rickettsia branch of the CDC.

The disease might have been spread by air or water, said Dr. David Fraser, a medical epidemiologist. He said research showed that "the risk of Legionnaires' Disease was greater in those who smoked cigarettes."

That, he said, was common among respiratory infections.

"There was no spread," of the disease among those who came in contact with victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, Shepard said.

"There is no danger to anyone in their communities whatsoever," he emphasized.

Tests involving cultures of the new bacteria and from an early 1960s outbreak of pneumonia at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington showed that the cause of the St. Elizabeth's outbreak which killed eight persons at the psychiatric hospital was a similar organism.

Alaska warm to inaugural

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska, Tuesday invited president-elect Jimmy Carter to move the entire inauguration to Anchorage and avoid the bitter cold in Washington.

"The sun is not yet up in Anchorage, but it is already 44 degrees (6 Celsius)," he told his colleagues.

A BETTER WAY THAN JAIL

No job of joy but better than boredom

Third of four parts
By King Lee
Colonist Reporter

As one might expect, persons ordered to perform community service work orders by Victoria provincial court judges, are not enthusiastic about it.

The reasons given most frequently are no monetary return and personal inconvenience.

But they perform the assigned duties because the judges, during sentencing, remind them that if they do not follow the probation officers' orders, they can be charged with the separate offence of breach of probation.

And the last thing most of them want is more trouble with the law.

The attitude seems to be, in many cases, get the thing over with.

Don Peterson and Dave Stallard, the two community services officers in the Victoria office at Douglas and Fisgard streets, provided Colonist reporter Stephen Hume with the names of some people who have performed the work.

These people, the officers thought, could provide an interesting cross-section of opinion about the program and its benefits, if any.

Hume, who has disguised the names of those with whom he spoke, relates the impressions of those obliged to do something for nothing.

Dennis thinks the community services program is the lesser of two evils. The greater evil is boredom.

"It's better than going to jail. But it's kind of a drag working eight hours a day for nothing," he said.

He doesn't have a long arrest record. He's 18 and he's been busted twice. The first time was for marijuana possession.

"It was a single joint. I was fined $75," he said.

The second time was for breaking and entering. The judge gave Dennis nine months' probation and 40 hours community work.

Dennis worked off his hours landscaping and putting in lawns for the town of Sidney. He worked one week for 40 hours. At the end of the week the town took him on as a temporary employee to "see how I'd work out," as Dennis put it. They liked his work and hired him at the end of April.

Dennis worked eight months for the Sidney parks department. He was laid off on Jan. 1, but he said he will probably be hired on again in the summer. His probation is over in January.

His estimation of the community services program: "It's better than standing around the streets doing nothing.

Tony is 20. He has nothing nice to say about the program. He didn't like working for nothing, and he didn't feel

Rockies tied for third spot in Smythe Division scramble

Colorado Rockies cannot realistically hope for anything better this season than a Stanley Cup playoff spot, but having a shot at that makes them one of the most improved clubs in the National Hockey League although the chance is there only because they are in the Smythe Division.

Playing as the Kansas City Scouts last season, the Rockies finished 36 points out of third place and 45 points behind the second-place Vancouver Canucks. Now, 45 games into the 80-game schedule, the Rockies are tied for third place with the Canucks and Minnesota North Stars and only nine points behind the second-place Chicago Black Hawks.

But it should have been third place to themselves and seven points away from the runner-up team. The Rockies had the Hawks at 7-3 late in the second period Tuesday night and finally had to settle for a 7-7 stalemate.

It was the fourth meeting of the season for the two clubs, and the Rockies are unbeaten against the defending division champions with two victories and two ties.

Rockies commanded play in the first two periods, firing 33 shots at Tony Esposito. They took 21 shots in a 4-2 first period, and then bounced back to open up a four-goal lead after the Hawks had moved to 3-4 at 8:40 of the second period.

Hawks scored a shorthanded goal at 17:33 of the second period, and then welcomed the change when the Rockies decided to replace goalkeeper Michel Plasse at the start of the third period.

Dick Redmond's second goal of the game came 69 seconds into the period, and Cliff Koroll and Ivan Boldirev brought the Hawks the rest of the way.

In other games Tuesday, Montreal Canadiens continued their inconsistencies by shutting out Washington Capitals 3-0, New York Islanders pounded the North Stars 7-2, and Los Angeles Kings opened a four-game home stand with a 6-3 conquest of Toronto Maple Leafs.

Canadiens, who have gone 6-0, 2-7, 6-0, 3-7 and 3-0 in their last five games, did their defensive thing in Landover. They were outshot, 30-23, by the hard-trying Capitals but there weren't too many real tough ones for Ken Dryden as he chalked up his sixth shutout of the season. Canadiens managed a goal each period, and less than three minutes remained before they got to 3-0.

Bryan Trottier, coming along after a slow start this season, and Andre St. Laurent, who doesn't score often, both had two goals for the Islanders, and St. Laurent also had an assist. Islanders had 45 shots on Gary Smith, and outshot North Stars 22-4 in the last period.

At Los Angeles, six players — including Marcel Dionne — scored for the Kings, who moved to within four points of second-place Pittsburgh Penguins in the Norris Division.

Ian Turnbull scored twice for the Maple Leafs.

Snepsts only Canuck named to all-stars

MONTREAL (CP) — Fred Shero has added eight players, including two Philadelphia Flyers, to complete the Campbell Conference all-star lineup for the 30th annual National Hockey League all-star game in Vancouver Jan. 25, it was announced Tuesday.

The NHL announced that defenceman Tom Bladon and rightwinger Gary Dornhoefer of the Flyers, defenceman Harold Snepsts of Vancouver Canucks and forwards Garry Unger and Phil Esposito of New York Rangers, Wilf Paiement of Colorado Rockies and Tom Lysiak of Atlanta Flames and Tim Young of Minnesota North Stars were all added to the club to augment the 12 players chosen in a poll among members of the Professional Hockey Writers Association.

Scotty Bowman, coach of the Prince of Wales Conference, also added eight players to his roster, including Marcel Dionne of Los Angeles Kings, now second in the NHL's scoring race.

Defenceman Jim Schoenfeld of Buffalo Sabres and Serge Savard of Montreal Canadiens, centres Peter McNab of Boston Bruins and Guy Charron of Washington Capitals, leftwingers Al MacAdam of Cleveland Barons and Nick Libett of Detroit Red Wings and rightwinger Jean Pronovost of Pittsburgh Penguins were added along with Dionne.

Following are the full rosters for both conferences for the all-star game. Should any of the 20 players named to each of the two teams be unable to play in the all-star game, Shero and Bowman must select a replacement from the team of the player unable to participate.

Clarence Campbell Conference—Goal — Bernie Parent, Philadelphia; Glenn Resch, NY Islanders. Defence—Phil Russell, Chicago; Denis Potvin, NY Islanders, Jim Watson, Joe Watson, Tom Bladon, Philadelphia; Harold Snepts, Vancouver. Centres — Bobby Clarke, Rick MacLeish, Philadelphia; Garry Unger, St. Louis, Phil Esposito, NY Rangers. Hamilton manages Burrards

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver Burrards of the Western Lacrosse Association announced Tuesday that Don Hamilton has become the club's general manager.

Hamilton, 39, who played senior lacrosse for 20 years, retired from active competition at the end of the last season. He replaces Bob Parry.

Hamilton played on the 1957 Mann Cup champion Victoria Shamrocks and was in goal when the Burrards won the Mann Cup in 1961 and 1975.

Canucks call on Gassoff

VANCOUVER (CP) — Left winger Brad Gassoff was recalled Tuesday by Vancouver Canucks of the National Hockey League for tonight's game here against Pittsburgh Penguins.

Gassoff, 21, had 12 goals and 16 assists in 31 games with Tulsa Oilers of the Central Hockey League. He scored one goal earlier in the season for the Canucks and was sent to Tulsa for conditioning purposes.

Shortstaffed Bays win in tuneup for Classic

Oak Bay Bays experienced a few problems Tuesday as they played their final league game prior to the Oak Leaf Classic Tournament.

The No. 1 ranked team in B.C. only had seven players dressed for the high school boys' basketball encounter with Esquimalt Dockers, but still managed an 88-58 win at Esquimalt.

In other games, Harbindar Sangarah scored a season high 40 points and Spectrum thumped Belmont Braves, 89-55, at Spectrum; Vic High Totems downed visiting Dunsmuir Demons, 96-78; and Reynolds Roadrunners upset the Rams, 61-58, at Mount Douglas.

The Bays hope to extend their No. 1 ranking to include the rest of Canada when they entertain top teams from across the nation this weekend in the first annual Oak Leaf Classic at Oak Bay and the University of Victoria.

With two of the top three teams in Ontario in the Classic the Bays will have to be better prepared than they were Tuesday.

Two starters sat out the game and a third saw limited action.

Ken Kirzinger, a six-foot-six centre, was late for the game and coach Don Horwood kept him on the bench, while Kelly Dukeshire sat out because of an injured finger and Rick Hatchman was used sparingly due to a cold.

Even with the player shortage the powerful Bays had little trouble with the Dockers. Craig Higgins fired in 27 points, Jay Loukes hit for 21 points, Wayne Andrews and Blair Boland scored 12 points each and Tih Tan hit for 10 points.

Barry Kalyn scored 18 points for Esquimalt and Bruce Shotten scored 16 points.

At Spectrum, Sangarah hit from outside and with driving layups increased his average to 27.2 per game, and six-foot-five Dan Ryan dominated the board and scored 26 points.

At Reynolds, Reg King scored 14 points and Ed Van Dyke hit for 13 points as the Roadrunners picked up their first win of the season by surprising the Rams. In a game last Thursday the Rams had thumped Reynolds, 77-50.

The Totems had little trouble with the Demons, leading by 20-0 early in the game and 45-30 at the half.

In North Island League play, unbeaten Nanaimo Islanders downed Cowichan Thunderbirds, 83-59, at Nanaimo and second-place Courtenay Towhees defeated Max Cameron Tartans of Powell River, 82-58 at Courtenay.

In the girls' league, Reynolds Roadrunners ran their winning streak to three games with a 48-41 decision over the Ramblers at Mount Douglas.

Tracy McAra scored 14 points, Rhonda Kellar hit for 13 points and Karen McComber scored 12 points for Reynolds, which led, 26-16, at the half.

A game between Vic High Tigers and Dunsmuir Demons was cancelled because the Dunsmiur team has withdrawn from the league.

Barr tied for lead

CHANDLER, Ariz. — Dave Barr is tied for the lead following the first round of the $55,000 San Marcos Open golf tournament, the third of four San Marcos tournaments sponsored by the National Golfers Association.

The 1975 B.C. Open champion from Kelowna carded a four-under-par 68 and was tied with Skip Dunaway of Charlotte, N.C., Dave Gilpin of Horton, Mich. and Rocky Waitt of Wichita, Kan.

Barr, who finished seventh in last week's tournament to earn $1550, went out in 35 and scored 33 on the back nine.

Cec Ferguson of Victoria and Bob Cox of Vancouver shot 73s.

Amateur leagues rap Blue Jays

TORONTO (CP) — Local amateur baseball officials are annoyed that their organizations will get no compensation for three pitchers signed recently by Toronto Blue Jays.

"Most teams in our league have to scrape just to keep going," said Howie Birnie, president of the Leaside junior league which has lost Bob Oravec, Remo Cardinale and Tom Dejak to the American League expansion club.

"It's not just the Blue Jays. We have never gotten anything from the teams that signed our players."

Peter Bavasi, general manager of the Blue Jays, says his club will not single out amateur teams or leagues for direct aid. However, he said the Blue Jays will give very strong support to any bid by the Ontario Baseball Association or Canadian Federation of Amateur Baseball for funds from the major leagues' amateur fund.

The OBA plans to make a formal request for major-league aid in 1978. The majors already have spent their 1977 funds.

Graluates of the Leaside league include relief ace John Hiller of Detroit Tigers and Ron Tayler, who made World Series relief appearances for New York Mets and St. Louis Cardinals.

Birnie said the only time his league got any money for developing a player was when pitcher Mike Kilkenny donated part of the money he got for signing with Detroit.

Jack Wilson, general manager of the High Park Baseball Association, sounded almost bitter about the way the Jays handled the signing of Dejak who played last season with a team in Wilson's association.

"They didn't even have the courtesy to call me," he said. "I found out Dejak had been signed when I read about it in the paper.

"When a hockey player is signed, his last junior team is compensated, and every one of his former teams right down to bantam gets a little bit.

"The Jays can come in here and lay hands on our boys without having to spend a cent. They take the boy away and don't give a nickel back."

World Cup playoffs still not settled

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Jose Luis Castillo, president of the National Soccer Federation, said Tuesday that soccer official Joaquin Soria Terrazas does not have the authority to award the site of the World Cup zone playoffs.

Soria Terrazas, president of the Regional Soccer Federation for North America, Central America and the Caribbean, awarded Mexico the zone playoffs for the 1978 World Cup to be held in Argentina.

Castillo added: "Soria Terrazas surely influenced the Canadians to decline their aspirations to be the site of the playoffs for the Argentina World Cup."

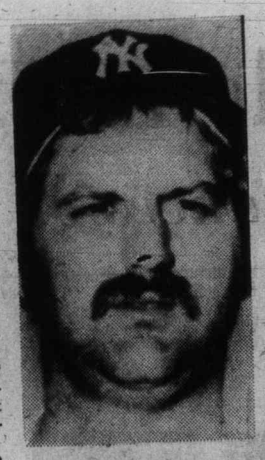
Teams that have qualified for the zone playoffs are Mexico, Canada, Guatemala, El Salvador, Haiti and Surinam.

"We will have to wait for the meeting of the six and it will be at that time precisely when it will be officially established when and where the zone playoffs will be held," Castillo added.

On Monday, the Canadian Soccer Association announced it cannot afford to be host for the playoffs and will support Mexico's bid to stage the round.

Eric King, CSA executive-director, said the decisions were made at a meeting of the association's directors following his inspection last week of the Mexican facilities.

The CSA decided that the $500,000 price tag to be host of the second round would have jeopardized the CSA's developmental programs, King said.



Munson

Munson shocks Yankees

NEW YORK (AP) — New York Yankees expressed shock that Thurman Munson, their captain, all-star catcher and the American League's Most Valuable Player, said he may ask to buy his contract or be traded from the American League champions.

"I'm surprised. I don't know anything," said a Yankee spokesman Tuesday. "I can't say anything until I talk to Thurman."

Munson, who batted .302 with 17 home runs and 105 runs batted in during the 1976 season, said Monday night at a dinner in Hamilton, Ont., that the Yankees weren't living up to two verbal agreements. One of the agreements being violated, according to Munson, pertains to the signing by the Yankees of free-agent outfielder Reggie Jackson. The catcher said the Yankees had promised him that he would remain the top-salaried player on the team.

Jackson received a five-year, $2.9 million contract. Munson is currently working on the second year of a three-year contract worth $140,000 a year.

Jarry Park for Expos

MONTREAL (CP) — John McHale, president of Montreal Expos, said Tuesday the National League baseball club will begin selling 1977 season tickets for Jarry Park, the club's home field for its first eight seasons.

"The business of baseball will not allow any further delays in the planning for the opening of the 1977 season," McHale said in a statement, adding that season ticket contracts will be in the mail by the end of this week.

The Expos have been negotiating with the Olympic installation board for the use of the Olympic stadium for the 1977 season, but nothing has been signed.

"The Expos have been advised today by the board that they have not reached a decision on our proposal but will consider further at the end of this month," McHale said.

"Our latest proposal is on the table after nearly a year of continuous negotiations and nothing has been finalized. It is regrettable that a lease cannot be completed at this time. However we remain hopeful and ready to discuss any new ideas."

McHale would not indicate the major areas of concern although reports have suggested the Expos apparently still want to operate the stadium completely for all activities.

The club was ordered to renegotiate a lease agreement reached with the board, a Quebec government agency which oversees the Olympic facilities, after the Parti Quebecois won the Nov. 15 provincial general election.

Claude Charron, the new minister responsible for sport, said the agreement with the previous Liberal administration was too generous to the club.

Jarry Park has a seating capacity of 28,456 while the Olympic Stadium would seat more than 50,000 for baseball.

Meanwhile, Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League have still not signed a deal for their use of the Olympic facility for the 1977 season.

However Alouettes' owner Sam Berger and his son David met with Charron and other cabinet officials Monday and while no negotiating was done, apparently everybody came away happy.

The Alouettes, who would have 10 home dates this season in the stadium if they reach an agreement with the board, played four CFL games in the stadium last year, drawing 65,505 for their first appearance last Sept. 26.

The Expos begin their 81-game home schedule April 15 against Philadelphia Phillies, last year's East Division champions.

NBA deal

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Golden State Warriors have traded backup centre George Johnson to Buffalo Braves for a 1977 first-round draft choice, the National Basketball Association team announced Tuesday.

Johnson, six-foot-11 and 220 pounds, is in his fourth year with the Warriors. Playing behind Clifford Ray.

Everton held to draw

LONDON (Reuter) — Second Division Bolton moved closer to Wembley and the English Football League Cup final with a 1-1 tie at Everton in the first leg of the semi-final soccer series Tuesday.

Everton brought the crowd of 54,000 to its feet when Duncan McKenzie, recently back from playing in Belgium for Anderlecht, headed the club into the lead 12 minutes before the half.

But Bolton had the better of the second half and with two minutes to go, Neil Whatmore scored the tying goal after Everton goalkeeper David Lawson was penalized for carrying the ball more than four steps.

The tie gave Bolton the edge because of the home game in the next leg.

Meanwhile, Trevor Francis of Birmingham and Malcolm Macdonald of Arsenal each scored three goals in a 3-3 draw between the First Division rivals.

The 50¢ Lunch

Scrambled Heroes!

Another quick'n thrifty lunchtime treat with eggs

1 loaf French bread, 14" long (OR 2 loaves, 7" long)
2 tbsp. oil
1 small green pepper
1 medium onion
6 eggs
½ tsp. salt

Cut bread into four equal pieces. Slice each piece in half so that slices remain hinged. Place uncovered in 325° oven while preparing egg filling.

Heat oil in 10" frying pan. Remove seeds from green pepper and cut into pieces 1" x ½". Slice onion into thin rings. When oil is moderately hot, add vegetables. Cook, stirring constantly, until tender and faintly brown.

Remove frying pan from heat. Beat eggs and salt in small bowl. Pour over vegetables in frying pan and return to heat. Stir eggs so uncooked portion runs to bottom of pan. Result should be between omelette and scrambled eggs.

Divide filling between four pieces of bread. Serve at once. Makes 4 sandwiches.

You'll love what you can do with eggs—and what eggs will do for your budget! For 4-dozen more great-tasting mealtime ideas, send 50¢ with your name and address to:

Joint spill cleanup sought

Report urges B.C. ties with coast guard

By STEPHEN HUME
Colonist Reporter

The provincial environment ministry should establish closer ties with the Canadian Coast Guard, and both agencies should be prepared to act quickly to minimize the effects on an oil spill on the shores of Vancouver Island.

This is one of the recommendations in a report prepared for the environment ministry by Andris Grikis, a technical officer with the Pollution Control Branch who was sent to observe cleanup operations last week in the Delaware River.

During docking manoeuvres the Liberian-registered Olympic Games ran aground on Dec. 27 in the Delaware River, spilling 133,500 gallons of Arabian crude oil and fouling the shorelines of three states.

Within six minutes of the first news of the spill, the U.S. Coast Guard had dispatched a patrol vessel to determine the degree of damage, Grikis told the Colonist Monday.

Within hours, five cleanup contractors employing about 200 people went to work placing booms (floating barriers) around the Olympic Games and across entrances to creeks and marshes to minimize damage to the eco-system, Grikis said.

(The Canadian Coast Guard said Monday it has $1 million worth of oil-spill control equipment, including booms, at locations in Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert.)

Grikis said the private contractors, hired on a full-time basis by the coast guard and also by refineries at Marcus Hook, Pa., where the disaster occurred, deal exclusively with oil spills.

"The first day of the spill they worked all through the night. After the first week they had it under control and started to gear down," he said.

"At the height of the flow the oil slick could be seen for 40 miles down from the spill site," he added.

The area around Marcus Hook is heavily industrialized, with numerous dock facilities along with sensitive marshlands, inaccessible shoreline, and wildlife, he said.

Grikis said the oil slick was not set on fire because of the air pollution that would ensue.

When he arrived at the scene, 15 days after 133,500 gallons of oil had gushed from the stranded tanker, much of it had dissipated and dispersed naturally from the river's surfaces.

The type of oil — Arabian crude — isn't as toxic as other oils, and contains butanes and propanes that dissipate easily with wind and wave action, he said.

But if the oil wasn't as damaging to water as other types, it still took a toll in wildlife.

Delaware's fish and wildlife department counted 3,077 dead waterfowl, all victims of the spill.

Grikis said 271 birds were retrieved by the fish and wildlife department. Half them were dead either from the effects of the oil or the solvent used to clean their feathers.

By spring, when the survivors will be released, the mortality rate will be even higher, Grikis said.

"How can the solvent be good for the birds when the men who are washing them have to wear masks so they don't breathe it?" he asked.

The oil disturbs the natural arrangement of the feathers, which normally keeps water off a bird's skin. When this happens, the bird catches pneumonia and dies, he said. The birds can also die from suffocation.

Solvent kills birds when they inhale it while grooming themselves, he said.

Grikis said there was little evidence of oil left on the shores — just a small band of black at the high-tide level.

Grikis is recommending in his report, which includes local notes on the spill, that helicopters, rather than boats, be used to transport spill-fighters and survey the damage. This would save money and spare the environment, he said.

The cleanup cost the U.S. Coast Guard $250,000 and Delaware $10,000.

Front-end loaders and muscle-power raked up much of the contaminated gravel and debris on the beaches. The material was loaded into trucks and deposited at garbage dumps in Wilmington, Del.

Grikis said some of the oil was trapped under the ice, and workers would have to wait for the next thaw to clean it up.

Posthumous award for pilot's bravery

Major F. W. Carr-Hilton, 48, formerly of Kelowna, B.C., a retired helicopter pilot killed in a car accident in Comox, B.C., Nov. 18, will be posthumously awarded a chief of the defence staff commendation today for his part in rescue operations in Georgia Strait in March of 1975.

The award will be accepted by his wife, Mrs. Greta Mae Carr-Hilton, at CFB Comox.

Maj. Carr-Hilton's citation reads: "In recognition of the dedicated professional manner in which he performed as the co-pilot of a Labrador helicopter during intensive day-long rescue operations in the Georgia Straits area of British Columbia March 30, 1975.

"Major Carr-Hilton played a vital part in the teamwork resulting in several rescue sorties being completed in particularly hazardous flying conditions."

Commendations are awarded to Forces members who, beyond the call of normal duty, perform a deed or an action worthy of commendation.

Saanich sales flood market

Housing crisis over in spring

A glut of houses for sale combined with a predicted three per cent vacancy rate in rental accommodation by early spring, indicates to Saanich Ald. John Mika that the housing shortage is over.

Mika told Saanich council Monday the municipality was overstocked with houses for sale, "and a three per cent vacancy rate in rentals is predicted by early spring. Meaning the housing crisis is over."

His comments came during council discussion of a motion to reject a re-zoning application to permit construction of a 36-unit apartment building at Glenora Place.

Mika, who sponsored the motion, said allowing construction of the medium-density apartment block would upset a pleasant and cohesive neighborhood.

Ald. Mary Casilio noted that 100 names were on petitions presented to council opposing the project which, she claimed, would create a serious traffic problem on Quadra Street.

Ald. Joseph Bourque, who cast the lone dissenting vote, said the proposal had received approval of the advisory planning commission and the planning department. "It's about damn time people had a choice of housing, the surplus referred to by Mika is a good thing."

Council was told assurances had been received from Ste. Michelle Winery of availability of sewer capacity for the proposed apartment.

Municipal engineer Clifford Warren reported that traffic generated from the proposed building would be about 250 cars a day.

France, U.S. to co-operate

PARIS (UPI) — France and the United States have signed a technical agreement to co-operate on research into the construction and safety of nuclear power breeder reactors. The agreement provides for the exchange of information and experts.

New constitution proposed to solve Quebec question

DUNCAN — The solution to Canada's dilemma of Quebec's possible separation lies in a new constitution ,according to former B.C. Supreme Court judge and MacMillan Bloedel chairman, J.V. Clyne.

He suggested that Prime Minister Trudeau immediately appoint a commission to meet continually for six months until it produces a constitution which it could recommend for adoption.

"The situation has now become critical with the election of an administration in Quebec composed of some very able men who are definitely committed to a policy of separation or independence from the rest of Canada.

Clyne
. . . vital to country

"The issue is, therefore, urgent and the time for action is now. I believe that a commission as I have suggested should be appointed without delay and it is within the power of Prime Minister Trudeau to do so," the 75-year-old former director of numerous companies and a member of a variety of previous commissions stated.

He said part of the complaint of the French separatists is that over the years by judicial interpretation Canada has swung away from the federated system which was believed to be embodied in the British North America Act and was supposed to guarantee Quebec all the autonomy needed to preserve and develop its own national life.

"It must be recognized that we are livng under a constitution which was framed over one hundred years ago to meet the political and economic circumstances of that time.

"It has become futile to try to examine judicially the wording of the statute in order to determine the intentions of the fathers of confederation and apply those intentions to conditions which have changed fundamentally," Clyne said.

Over the decades there had been continuing legal conflicts concerning the act, but there was no machinery under the constitution to resolve differences between the federal government and the provinces.

Clyne said the BNA Act was designed in 1867 to give a measure of self-government to Canada, but it did not give it the power to alter its constitution by its own volition.

"This is, of course, a right which is basic in any free democracy and it is entirely our own blame that we cannot exercise such a right . . . By contrast, the United States has made numerous vital amendments to its constitution to meet the needs of a changing society."

Clyne said it may be that government in Ottawa has grown too big and centralized and that greater powers should be spread among the provinces.

"I am not suggesting that a particular exception should be made in favour of Quebec because the problem is national in scope. But greater provincial autonomy might afford a complete cure to the complaints of those who wish to divide the country because they want greater authority in the administration of what they consider to be their own affairs."

The former judge said, in 1964 a formula (Fulton-Favreau) was found which met almost total acceptance by both provincial and federal levels of government and was drafted in a final form to be laid before British Parliament.

"It is tragic that at the eleventh hour . . . it was scuttled by unfortunate political leadership at both federal and provincial levels.

"It is clear to everyone that we do not deserve the name or dignity of a nation if we cannot later alter our own constitution," Clyne stated.

The reluctance to agree on a formula lies in the fear that a power to amend might produce changes in the constitution which are presently unknown," he said.

To circumvent this, he suggested the prepation of an act embodying a completely new constitution adapted to existing social and economic conditions.

But he emphasized, that the commission appointed to study this matter should not be made up of politicians absorbed in the day to day affairs of the provinical and federal governments and should be given a stringent time limit.

"In our fast changing society they (politicians) have not the time and possibly the inclination to meditate upon the intricacies of constitutional problems as did such men as Sir John A. MacDonald and the other fathers of confederation," Clyne asserted.

In his speech, which was given a standing ovation by those attending the joint meeting of Duncan service clubs, he also warned both separatist and others, who would say "good riddance to Quebec," not to take his words lightly.

Quoting from numerous foreign financial journals, he said, it must be realized that even from a purely economic point of view the issue affects not only the future of Quebec but the financial structure of the whole of Canada.

"I do not suggest that foreign observers are able to judge the state of our society in any better way than we can ourselves but it is always wise to see ourselves as others see us and to realize that outside opinion today regards Canada as shaky, socially, politically and economically.

"I neet not tell this audience that foreign debts financing is essential to the Canadian economy," he said, elaborating on the insurmountable problems which would arise if Quebec did separate.

Refering to recent opinion polls which indicate the majority of Quebec voters do not want to separate, Clyne cautioned those people against taking comfort from those results.

"I suggest that on a subject of this importance it is highly dangerous to rely upon the strength of opinion polls where national existence is at stake," he said.

It's snow but not enough

Sign in top picture tells it all—still no skiing in Port Alberni's Arrowsmith ski development. Despite record high temperatures in some parts in past couple of days, snow did fall recently, but not enough to help ski resort operators. Fear is that this winter may match last year's disastrous conditions, with similar financial losses. For those who don't ski but find joy in white winter scenes, picture on right is of stream in Cathedral Grove on Highway 4.

Protection Island

Nanaimo acts on ferry

NANAIMO — City council on Monday decided to go ahead with a bid to use the emergency measures section of the Municipal Act to solve the Protection Island ferry issue, despite objections from the island residents' association.

If the provincial government allows the use of that section of the act, council will be able to pay the operators of the privately owned ferry a $30,000 a year subsidy to keep it running.

Leeshore Resorts Ltd. halted the ferry to the island last fall for economic reasons, leaving the 350 residents without service.

Council decided to go the emergency measures route after Municipal Affairs Minister Hugh Curtis three times turned down requests to allow the ferry to become part of the regional transit system.

But Monday the residents' association said in a letter they did not consider it an emergency stiuation and had asked the government not to allow the subsidy.

The association did not say how it wanted the issue resolved and Ald. Ray Brookbank said he had been told the ratepayers' association, a separate island group, was planning to reform after breaking up before Christmas because of dissension.

"They are meeting Feb. 14, but I don't think we can wait until then.

"I am in a real quandary now over this. We have tried to act in the best interests of the island, but we can't seem to find out what they want."

Qualicum Beach plans hearing on subdivision

QUALICUM BEACH — The Qualicum Beach village council will hold a public hearing so residents can voice their opinions on a proposed 27-lot subdivision below the Qualicum College Inn. College Estates Ltd., the developers, have applied for a land use contract.

The hearing is scheduled for Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Qualicum Beach community hall.

Only single family dwellings will be permitted in the subdivision. An area has been allocated for a small park and beach access will be assured. No building will be permitted on the beach.

College Estates Ltd. have made several attempts to develop the land which overlooks the Georgia Strait. Originally the land belonged to the Qualicum College boys school. After the school was closed the buildings were adapted for use as a hotel and a new wing was added.

The developers' first proposal was for a condominium, but this met with considerable public opposition and the idea was dropped.

Law profession closer to Duncan community

DUNCAN — The recently-elected bar association president, Don Taylor, says the legal profession locally has made a conscious effort to become more involved with the community in the past couple of years and plans to be more involved in the future.

The 28-year-old lawyer, who has been practising for almost four years in Duncan, was elected two weeks ago by his 24 counterparts in the city to succeed barrister and solicitor David Wright.

Taylor told the Colonist that the law profession generally has possibly failed to communicate with the public in the past, and as a result of this was not looked upon too highly by some people.

"The basic nature of the profession, that is dealing with issues which can be contentious, is bound to generate some ill-feeling at times toward lawyers.

"The profession is beginning to realize this and locally we are making an effort to dispel this."

A recent example of the Duncan Bar Association's involvement was a free program through Malaspina College last fall called Layman and the Law.

Taylor
. . . more involved

Taylor said the series of seminars co-ordinated by another local lawyer, Brian McDaniel, was well-attended and beneficial not only to the layman, but also to the lawyers who participated in the lectures.

"The profession itself benefitted because it gave the layman a greater understanding of what we are faced with, and we also developed an understanding of some of the apprehensions of a layman when he is considering seeking legal advice," Taylor stated.

Malaspina College has asked the Duncan bar to conduct the program again this fall and the Duncan president said he was pleased with the response.

Asked if he felt such a program might entice the layman to conduct his legal affairs without the advice of a lawyer, Taylor said the profession didn't feel threatened by this.

"We have nothing to fear from a populace that is more aware of their legal rights . . . actually the opposite is possibly the case," he said.

Another community function the profession is highly involved in its legal aid to those who cannot afford the usual legal services.

Taylor said the Duncan Bar Association now was handling more than 500 free interviews a year.

He said the association was also studying the idea of an annual scholarship to students in the Cowichan Valley, who needed financial assitance.

"We can never completely dispel the criticism of our profession by some. However, we are making an effort to counter this with more available information and community involvement."

Girl injured in gunplay

Five-year-old Tara Michelle Harknett remained in fair condition Monday night in Royal Jubilee Hospital after an accidental shooting Saturday at her parents' home in Brentwood Bay.

Central Saanich police believe the girl found a gun in a drawer in a bedroom at 7042 Hagan Road and also found some bullets. She apparently loaded the weapon and showed it to five-year-old playmate.

While the gun was in the hands of Tara's friend, it discharged and the bullet went through Tara's chest and struck the spinal column, police said.

Cricket perhaps, but not for skiers

Green hills—red ledgers

By BILL SMITH
Colonist Reporter

There's green on the slopes and none in the cash tills of Vancouver Island ski resort operators in this no-snow winter.

Green Mountain ski area near Nanaimo, living up to its name, has lost to heavy rains all the snow that covered its slopes.

"It's so beautiful up there, so green, I'm thinking of inviting a Victoria cricket team up for a game next weekend," Nanaimo Mayor Frank Ney said in a phone interview Tuesday.

Confident that Green Mountain would get snow, Ney said the season so far could only be described as disastrous.

About 14 inches of snow covered Green Mountain slopes last Friday, "and we were keeping our fingers crossed that winter had finally arrived. But our dreams were washed away with the heavy weekend downpour."

Ney said although the ski society had many volunteer workers, "we still have debts to retire."

He said the Island was experiencing its worst no-snow winter since 1921 and said that as mayor he was becoming greatly concerned about the water table.

Snowpack measurement in elevated areas were all far below averages for this time of year, he said.

"Island residents would be well advised to stock up with beer," Ney said, "because we're going to be short of water, of that you can be sure."

At Forbidden Plateau near Courtenay, the Mount Becher Ski Society expects its season's losses will reach $200,000 by the end of January.

"It's a financial disaster," society member Herb Bradley said.

When Bradley left the ski hill late Tuesday afternoon only a few inches of snow lay at the lookout on top of Mount Becher. "The rest of the slopes was lovely green and brown grass."

Forty full-time and 36 part-time employees have been laid off, Bradley said.

He still hoped for a heavy snowfall in the next few days.

"The latter part of January, February and March are usually our busiest months, so our rather bleak financial picture could change if the snow flies."

Bradley said despite the absence of snow, plans were still proceeding for the annual Comox Valley Winter Carnival Feb. 4-13.

"If we don't get snow, it will mean many events planned for the slopes will be cancelled, but we will go ahead with other planned activities including the torchlight parade on the mountain."

The snow at Arrowsmith, near Port Alberni, has gone, and Lower Mainland ski hills lost what snow they had with heavy rain on Monday.

Animal control sharing sought

DUNCAN — A committee of the Cowichan Valley Region Board will meet with the municipality of North Cowichan to discuss the feasibility of sharing animal control services.

The board decided to approach the municipality after administrator Bob Sharp reported last week that he had received two proposals in response to an advertisement asking for bids to supply animal control.

One was from a Larry Nykalyk, who was previously the domestic animal protection officer for the agriculture department, and another from Dan Hughes, who runs the Cowichan Animal Shelter which services the municipalities of Duncan, Lake Cowichan and North Cowichan.

The administrator said the two offers were similar and would likely result in a deficit to the electoral areas involved of $72,000, which represents a mill rate increase of .318.

Considering Hughes' experience, facilities and equipment, Sharp recommended that he be hired rather than Nykalyk.

But he said because of Hughes' agreement with North Cowichan, which includes the municipality's ownership of the facilities, the administrator recommended he meet with them to determine whether they would be agreeable to a joint facility.

He suggested if the municipality was interested, the city of Duncan and the village of Lake Cowichan should also be approached to see whether they wished to enter into a blanket contract for the whole region district.

The Cowichan Valley board agreed and a meeting was being arranged with the municipality.

Development body sought by farmers

The B.C. Federation of Agriculture is advocating provincial legislation to provide for the establishment of an agricultural development agency.

The agency, made up of representatives from the government, the farming community and related industries, would have the following objectives:

- Encourage food production to meet domestic requirements.
- Enhance market opportunities for the local farmer.
- Encourage the processing of B.C. agricultural products.
- Utilize the climate and available soil to full agricultural capacity.
- Minimize farm input costs.

The development agency was proposed by BCFA president Ralph Barichello of Langley, in his address to the 88th annual convention of B.C. Fruit Growers in Vernon.

Barichello said the agency's primary responsibility would be "to put the agricultural industry into a competitive and viable situation, and to make sure that it stayed there. We want a central role for farmers in the agency," he said.

He said the "door has been left open" for the creation of such an agency by a commitment of the Social Credit party during the last election campaign to a policy of "returning power to the people" as a key to its farm platform.

"The BCFA believes producers have to take a more active role in the planning and development of the agricultural industry in this province," Barichello said.

Barichello saw the agency as a co-ordinated effort by politicians, farmers and the farming industry to provide economic growth and secure a food supply for British Columbians on a long-term basis.

In his speech to fruit growers, Barichello also assessed the Farm Income Assurance plan, which originated with the former New Democratic Party government in 1973 as a means not of subsidizing the farm industry, but of stabilizing it.

Since 1973, Farm Income Assurance has ensured the survival of both the agriculture industry and the family farm in B.C., he said.

"The federation intends to do everything in its power to ensure that permanent income stability will be available to B.C. fruit growers," he said, noting that Farm Income Assurance for the growers expired at the end of the 1977 marketing season.

Groups without farm assurance — field vegetable growers, strawberry growers, broiler and turkey producers — were "a priority item from the BCFA point of view," Barichello said.

First contracts for such groups should be established on an equitable basis, he said.

Noting that it was pointless to save farmland through an agricultural land freeze unless farmers were "saved" too, Barichello said the BCFA would continue to work to remove farmers from "the endangered species list."

'Conceit' of experts holds back pump

VANCOUVER (CP) — Frank Hillis of Victoria says he has perfected a fish loading and unloading device that could help save lives at sea, but federal fisheries officials oppose his invention.

Hillis demonstrated his water-jet-powered device Monday by pumping 40 tons of herring through it in less than an hour, but fisheries department officials were not convinced of its worth.

Bill Razzell, director of technology and inspection for the department's Pacific region, said the pump had not proved that it could do the job.

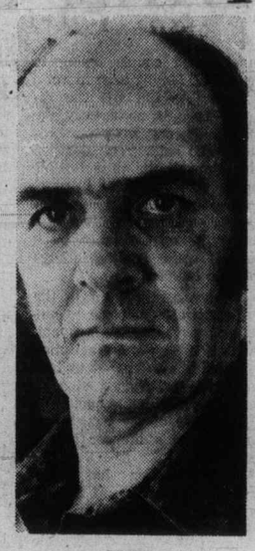
Hillis accused the department of deliberately blocking efforts to market a device that showed its worth three years ago.

"It's straight conceit. All these fisheries types have engineering degrees. I don't have one, so they don't recognize me.

"I've been building and demonstrating these pumps for more than three years, and last November the government experts tell the major fishing companies that my pumps won't do the job, and it puts me out of business."

Hillis said he sold 25 of his machines at $18,500 each before he found himself without customers.

A fisherman himself, Hillis said the best feature of his pump, aside from its ease of operation and speed, was that it was easily transported and worked well at sea under almost any conditions.



Hillis
. . . point proved

"It will pump out flooded holds or dry holds, pump from seine nets to the hold, from a fishing boat to a packer or barge and from vessel to shore. It's relatively very cheap and it can mean the difference betwen life and death.

"In the 1975 herring season, several boats went down with their crews because they were overloaded. My pump could have stopped some of those sinkings and in 1976, it did."

Hillis, 45, of 2067 Cedar Hill Cross Road, has also invented a machine clearing lakes of weeds which has been demonstrated in Greater Victoria.

Razzell said Monday's demonstration did not prove the device because the herring were pumped a vertical distance of about 12 feet. Twice that height would have to be negotiated at a higher dock or a low tide.

He said his disagreement with Hillis was that he hadn't produced a pump that would handle fish quickly and without damaging them.

The pump works through suction produced by pumping water into the pickup pipe at a pressure of 200 pounds a square inch and, unlike some pumps, it operates well with a mixture of fish, water and air.

In a parting shot at his critics in the fisheries department, Hillis raised the discharge nozzle off his pump about 25 feet in the air and shot a stream of herring into the Fraser River.

"That doesn't prove he could do it with more herring and less air," Razzell said.

The seagulls, however, were delighted.

'Provincial thinking narrow'

Vander Zalm 'ignorant' on Quebec—nationalist

If Quebec goes its own way much of the blame can be placed on the "remarkable ignorance" of people like B.C. Human Resources Minister William Vander Zalm and the apathy of Canadians as a whole, crusading nationalist Mel Hurtig said this week.

"I'm appalled at the remarkable ignorance of the recent statements of Vander Zalm," the Edmonton publisher told a luncheon meeting of the Men's Canadian Club of Victoria.

Lumping Vander Zallm with those who would like to see Canada turned into a system of balkanized states, Hurtig said: "Canada is already the most decentralized country of any industrial democracy today."

Yet people like Vander Zalm want to take more power away from Ottawa, while denying at the same time the plea of municipalities for more say in their own affairs, he said.

During an interview, Hurtig included the cabinet minister with those he accuses of "narrow provincial" thinking and "bigotry."

The attack on Vander Zalm came a day after Opposition Leader David Barrett had referred to his anti-Quebec remarks as "lame-brain."

Hurtig, one of the founders of the Committee for an Independent Canada, said bigotry was being fed by such distasteful events as the highly successful sale in Vancouver of T-shirts carrying the picture of a beaver strangling a frog.

He blamed political leaders and "newspaper people" for not taking a stand against such practices.

Hurtig used his favorite topic — foreign investment — as a means of emphasizing the threat to Confederation. Repeating alarming figures from earlier speeches about American takeover of business and land, he said most Canadians didn't seem to care.

The future of the country remained in doubt, he said, "when every day you're selling off your land and your industry, and every day you fail to teach your young people the history of your country and the values of your country."

Quebec, he said, could not be expected to feel strongly about the future of Canada when it sees the other provinces being sold out to foreign interests, and sees "a total absence of feeling as a whole."

The time has come, Hurtig warned, when people everywhere "should get off their rear ends and do something to help save this country."

Referring to the gradual loss of large land tracts to U.S. interests, Hurtig said: "Just answer me this simple question — tell me what is going to be left to your children?

"If you continue with your apathy in allowing this country to be bought up, the opportunity of Canadians to dream the Canadian dream — to dream the dream of Sir John A. Macdonald — will have passed, and Canada will literally have reached the point of no return."

Man found guilty in medicine theft

A 29-year-old man was found guilty Tuesday in Victoria county court of breaking and entering and theft Dec. 12 at Turnbull's Pharmacy, 900 Esquimalt Road.

Richard William Stewart, 521 Foster, will be sentenced by Judge Peter Millward Feb. 8 after he receives a pre-sentence report.

The theft involved an 80-ounce bottle of prescription cough medicine.

The judge said he had "no hesitation" in finding Stewart did break and enter the pharmacy and steal the cough medicine.

He rejected the defence of drunkenness to the point of inability to form specific intent to commit the crime, saying he found "no evidence whatever to satisfy me or to indicate strongly that the accused did not know what he was doing."

Court was told Stewart broke the front door, removed jagged pieces of glass, went into the pharmacy and emerged with the cough medicine bottle. He was apprehended by police a short time later.

□

A 29-year-old man who failed to appear for his trial Oct. 6 made a brief appearance before Judge M. L. T. Drake after being arrested earlier in Nanaimo.

Kenneth Moorhouse is accused of escaping from Wilkinson Road jail Dec. 16, 1975. He was freed from jail on a habeas corpus application April 29, 1976.

A trial date will be set later.

Charred totems may be savable

Provincial conservator Philip Ward said Tuesday he would be going to the Queen Charlotte Islands in a few weeks to assess damage to seven totem poles charred in a fire last week near Skidegate.

He said that from discussions with Queen Charlotte Islands Museum curator Trisha Gessler, it appeared the poles had been charred all over, but not deeply.

"We may be able to do something," Ward said, adding that restoration, if it were possible, would be "a unique problem in my experience."

The poles, originally from long-deserted Haida villages, had been returned to the Charlottes less than a year ago from the Provincial Museum. They burned in an early-morning fire in a shed located near the Charlottes museum.

If a restoration attempt were made it would be a long time before it was known whether it would work, Ward said. "We would have to try to devise something new."

U.S. charges Delta man

DELTA, B.C. (CP) — Carl Hinke, a resident of this municipality south of Vancouver who took out Canadian citizenship about 1½ years ago, said Monday he had been ordered to appear in Newark, N.J., court Feb. 1 to face a charge of refusing to register for the United States draft.

THERE'S TWO WAYS TO LOOK AT HONDA'S TOP MILEAGE NUMBERS.

1. LEAST CENTS PER MILE.*

Fill up a Honda Civic CVCC. It'll take Regular gas. The good news is you can probably top the tank for less than $8.00. The bad news: gas prices are going up.

With gas costed at 90¢ a gallon, according to the Transport Canada fuel economy figures, you can keep the popular Honda Civic Sedan or Hatchback in gasoline for about 2.1¢ per mile. The Station Wagon for 2.3¢ per mile, the best of any 5-door wagon. The CVCC for 1.7¢ per mile, and nobody's topped that figure. The remarkable Accord needs 1.95¢ per lovely mile.

Your nearby Honda dealer has some other figures you'll like. A price that's a sight for sore eyes. And some eye-popping space statistics. See him soon.

2. MOST MILES PER GALLON.*

Of all figures released by Transport Canada, the 1977 Honda Civic CVCC and Honda Accord achieved the highest gas mileage. Both are 5-speed hatchbacks, and fifth gear gives them boosts in mileage by dropping rpm's while cruising.

The actual figures:

CVCC: 47 city, 62 highway, 53 combined.

Accord: 30 city, 58 highway, 46 combined.

Nobody did better than that. But that's only one way to look at fuel economy.

HONDA

PUT A SMILE ON YOUR FACE. DRIVE A HONDA.

*Based on Combined city and highway mileage figures, as supplied by the Ministry of Transport "Fuel Economy Guide." Your actual mileage may vary based on such factors as the type of driving, options fitted to the car, seasonal temperatures, road conditions, the condition of your car and how you drive.

New dispute shaping up

Accord eases strike threat by firefighters

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Victoria may be safely out of one explosive firefighters' dispute, just in time to plunge into another.

A tentative agreement between negotiators for the firefighters and the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association Monday morning appeared to have removed a recurring strike threat. The firefighters will be meeting tonight to vote on a 1976 agreement that is being recommended by their negotiating team.

At the same time, the firefighters have presented the GVLRA with their 1977 contract proposals. A general list of requests was handed over to the municipal bargainers earlier and an additional list was presented Monday.

For Victoria and its neighboring municipalities, the tempo will be stepped up even more once a major round of negotiations with 2,000 civic employees has worked its way through the preliminary stages.

The core municipalities, through their bargaining arm of GVLRA, met representatives of eight locals of the Canadian Union of Public Employees Friday and proposed a two-year agreement that would adhere to the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines. The CUPE counter proposals are to be made at a Feb. 1 meeting.

Tentative agreement in the firefighters' dispute involves a compromise proposal from Victoria Mayor Michael Young. Young proposed last week that the city comply with a binding arbitration award calling for 1976 wage parity with Vancouver firefighters, but with the provision that deductions be made to cover the 4.8 per cent 1975 wage rollback ordered by the AIB. There also had to be agreement on recovery of money in the event of a rollback in the 1976 agreement.

Chief GVLRA negotiator Carl Anshelm said Monday the city has been assured by the AIB it would not be prosecuted for overpayment if the firefighters agree to the proposed agreement.

The city had voiced fear of being penalized if it exceeded the AIB guidelines in matching the Vancouver pay rate — $1,422 a month for a first-class firefighter.

Ross Cameron, president of the Victoria firefighters local, said parity with the interim Vancouver agreement would mean an increase of more than 10 per cent. The guideline for 1976 was 8 per cent, with exceptions for cases of historic relationship. The firefighters have argued they are covered by such relationship.

The firefighters served 72-hour strike notice eight days ago, but couldn't act while mediator Clark Gilmour was still actively involved in the case.

"And now Gilmour has been retained for the 1977 bargaining," Cameron said.

"But I have reason to believe we might get the 1977 contract out of the way in a month."

Any such development would mean a drastic break with tradition. Much of the time contracts run a year behind and with few exceptions are arrived at only after binding arbitration.

Nevertheless, Cameron remains optimistic about the 1977 contract talks. He gives no reason for his optimism other than to say the firefighters "feel our demands are very reasonable."

Meanwhile, the core municipalities head into talks with their civic employees two years after unsuccessful negotiations with the same group led to a three-month lockout strike.

Both sides indicate a desire to avoid a similar tieup that would once again reduce services and leave the streets strewn with litter and tennis courts piled high with garbage.

But it would appear likely that GVLRA is going to run into considerable opposition with its proposal that the agreement cover two years, staying within the declining federal anti-inflation guidelines. This would mean an increase of 6 per cent for 1977 and just 4 per cent the next year.

In addition to this, GVLRA wants the establishment of a joint management - union committee that would work on a continuous basis to streamline the contract. It could also serve to improve labor relations.

Representatives of the CUPE locals spent all day Monday working on the union's counter proposal and expected to do the same today.

The job is considered so vital CUPE research director Larry Katz has come from Ottawa to assist with the drafting of the proposals.

Car lands atop empty bed

The driver and passenger in a car which went through the wall of a home and ended up on top of an empty bed at Cordova Bay Sunday night, suffered minor head injuries in the unusual accident.

Saanich police said a car driven by 32-year-old Blaine Rowlette, of 4903 Bellcrest, was heading east on Cordova Bay Road when he lost control and crashed into a house at 774 Cordova Bay Road.

Both Rowlette and passenger Fred Simmons, 53, of 1850 McKenzie, were treated for minor head injuries after being taken to Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Downtown thermometer registers 21 in early afternoon

West basks

Warmest Jan. 18 ever — official 13, unofficial 21

It's not official, but the temperature in downtown Victoria hit a summery 21 degrees Celsius at about 3 p.m. Tuesday afternoon. That's what registered on thermometers downtown and the Cablevision weather scanner.

But even officially, the weather office says record highs were set at Pat Bay (13.3 degrees compared with the previous Jan. 18 high of 12.2 degrees in 1956) and at the Gonzales observatory, where the mercury hit 14.1 degrees.

The shirtsleeves 21-degree figure came from both a revolving thermometer at the Royal Trust building at Douglas and View and from Channel 10 cable's sensor.

A quick tour around Greater Victoria Tuesday afternoon brought glimpses of joggers down to T-shirts and shorts, a girl cyclist in a halter top, a sailboat out in Beaver Lake, a couple of hunters training their dogs — and unconfirmed reports of someone shooting ducks on Panama flats.

And although ewes are reporting lambing early on the Saanich Peninsula, the weatherman warns it's far too early for a young man's fancy to turn to love.

"Don't start talking spring yet, or you'll really bring it down on us," he said Tuesday night.

However, U.S. weather officials said the 30-day outlook for this area indicates continuing mild weather.

A cool front that passed through Washington state Tuesday morning permitted clearing and an intake of warm Pacific air to bathe most of Vancouver Island in Hawaiian-style warmth.

We can still feel smug about the weather compared with the deep-freeze which has eastern Canada and much of the Atlantic United States in the worst winter grip for years, but the weatherman isn't optimistic for more sunshine today.

A cool front that headed in late Tuesday night was expected to bring a low of 5, with mild cloudy weather today, followed by rain and drizzle this afternoon.

Thursday's weather forecast calls for showers. Rain in the 24 hours to 11 p.m. Monday amounted to 39.2 mm, nearly an inch and a half.

Fuel crimp adds woes

Associated Press

Energy conservation, a theme from the days of oil embargoes, was a stark reality to many in the midwestern and eastern regions of the United States on Tuesday as severe winter cold maintained its grip.

Record-breaking low temperatures clogged navigable waterways with ice, severely hampering traffic on such widespread transportation lanes as the Ohio, Mississippi and Thames rivers and the Great Lakes.

Ice floes were as high as 12 feet in some parts of the Mississippi River near St. Louis, officials reported.

Mel Doernhoefer, a spokesman for the U.S. Army's corps of engineers, said: "When you consider that 60 per cent of the millions of tons of cargo that move past St. Louis each year is fossil fuel—coal, fuel oil or gas—you have to believe that some power plants and factories up the Illinois River toward Chicago are going to be hurting soon."

Similar conditions on the Ohio River already have forced cuts in power production and industry as far east as Pennsylvania. Portions of the Ohio were frozen solid, for the first time since 1948, officials said.

Pennsylvania Lt.-Gov. Ernest Kline declared a state of emergency Monday. He said his chief concern was a critical natural gas delivery problem in the western part of the state.

Officials of the three gas companies that supply the area's 750,000 customers said they have sufficient supplies of gas, but pressure in the pipeline delivery system cannot be maintained under the demand for fuel.

The company executives met Tuesday to decide when schools might be reopened and when 300 industries—including steel plants—might expect renewed delivery. Their best estimate was next week.

School closings also brought tragedy when four children, who normally would have been in school, were killed in a Springfield, Mo., house fire.

Hydro 'out of control'

Debt will soon exceed total budget of B.C.

House leader of the New Democratic Party William King (Revelstoke-Slocan) said Tuesday night he thought B.C. Hydro was now completely out of the control of politicians in the Legislature.

King made the statement outside the chamber after the Legislature was asked to approve a bill increasing the borrowing power of Hydro from $3.5 billion to $4.150 billion, an increase of $650 million over [illegible]ent borrowing limits.

The bill will be debated later in the session.

Finance Minister Evan Wolfe said the increased borrowing power was required to meet anticipated capital costs of Hydro over the next year, to meet increasing energy requirements.

King said he was concerned that the total indebtedness of Hydro would then exceed the total B.C. budget if the bill was approved. The current budget for the 1976-77 fiscal year totals $3.6 billion.

"I'm afraid the bureaucracy within Hydro is too strong," King said. "They are perpetuating that bureaucracy by projecting ever-increasing power loads. I'm afraid they are completely out of control."

King said there was a remarkable difference between the energy predictions of Hydro and the energy predictions made by the B.C. Energy Commission.

"It seems to me that the time has come when Hydro can no longer be trusted to make its own energy requirement predictions," King said. "It should no longer be allowed to set its own targets. We must have an independent body like the energy commission to set the targets.

"The Hydro debt load is becoming, in fact will soon become, too heavy for the people of this province to carry."

Premier Bennett doesn't share that view. He said it had to be remembered with Hydro that it had "tremendous assets" to cover its indebtedness.

Insiders' windfalls from ICBC salvage

By PAUL BENNETT
Colonist Reporter

No clear guidelines exist for the disposal of at least $100,000 worth of non-automotive salvage by the Insurance Corp. of B.C. each year, the Colonist has learned.

Dennis Cocke (NDP — New Westminster) said he intended to investigate the possibility of conflict of interest by ICBC employees owing to the "ridiculous" lack of guidelines.

He will place written questions on the Legislature order paper as a start to his investigation.

ICBC's policy for the disposal of goods ranging from boats through furniture to bicycles does not require advertising or otherwise making public the fact the goods are available, according to an ICBC official.

"In the case of a large item like a recovered stolen boat, we might advertise it," the official said, "but it's just not worth it for most items."

Here the procedure is simply that ICBC clerks phone people they think might be interested, such as second-hand dealers, and let them know what will be up for grabs.

Tanker snaps in half, three seamen missing

MIDWAY ISLAND (UPI) — A U.S. Coast Guard search plane scanned the Pacific Tuesday in search of three men missing after a Liberian tanker broke in half 200 miles southeast of Midway Island, dumping its cargo of 950 tons of fuel oil in a huge brown patch 10 miles wide and 15 miles long across the tropical waters.

The fate of three men, stranded on the bow section of the tanker Irenes Challenger when she split in two late Monday night, was unknown. Twenty-eight others aboard the tanker were rescued from the aft section by the Pacific Arrow, a Japanese freighter.

The three missing crewmen were seen alive board their floating half of the ship late Monday night, but at dawn they were no longer seen, and the fore section was up-ended.

Alaska warm to inaugural

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Senator Ted Stevens of Alaska Tuesday invited president-elect Jimmy Carter to move the entire inauguration to Anchorage and avoid the bitter cold in Washington.

"The sun is not yet up in Anchorage, but it is already 44 degrees (6 Celsius)," he told his colleagues.

Egyptians rioting over prices

CAIRO (AP) — Thousands of Egyptians angered by government-ordered price increases rioted in Cairo and the port city of Alexandria Tuesday night, stoning police, setting fire to police stations and denouncing President Anwar Sadat amid chants of "Nasser, Nasser, Nasser."

Gamal Abdel Nasser, Sadat's late predecessor, was popular with the peasants and the urban poor, the group hardest hit by the price increases.

Legionnaire disease pinned down at last

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) — A bacterium-like organism previously unknown as a human killer caused the Legionnaires' Disease which killed 29 persons in Philadelphia, Pa. last summer, the national Centre for Disease Control announced Tuesday.

The organism, which the CDC called a bacterium for purposes of identification, was isolated from lung tissue of one of the victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, which struck 151 other persons who eventually recovered. Most of the victims were members of the American Legion attending a convention at a Philadelphia hotel.

The CDC said it was not known how the victims contracted the disease.

"In the routine process of making sure we had not missed a rickettsia, we found the bacterium," said Dr. Joseph McDade, a research microbiologist who isolated the organism.

A rickettsia is an organism between bacterium and virus on the biologic scale.

"It appears to be something we've never associated with human illness," McDade said.

Researchers said the disease caused by the organism, which has no name, was apparently not contagious.

"You know whether a disease is contagious or not by whether or not it spreads among the patients' contacts," said Dr. Charles Shepard, chief of the leprosy and rickettsia branch of the CDC.

The disease might have been spread by air or water, said Dr. David Fraser, a medical epidemiologist. He said research showed that "the risk of Legionnaires' Disease was greater in those who smoked cigarettes."

That, he said, was common among respiratory infections.

"There was no spread," of the disease among those who came in contact with victims of the Legionnaires' Disease, Shepard said.

"There is no danger to anyone in their communities whatsoever," he emphasized.

Tests involving cultures of the new bacteria and from an early 1960s outbreak of pneumonia at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Washington showed that the cause of the St. Elizabeth's outbreak which killed eight persons at the psychiatric hospital was a similar organism.

A BETTER WAY THAN JAIL

No job of joy but better than boredom

Third of four parts
By King Lee
Colonist Reporter

As one might expect, persons ordered to perform community service work orders by Victoria provincial court judges, are not enthusiastic about it.

The reasons given most frequently are no monetary return and personal inconvenience.

But they perform the assigned duties because the judges, during sentencing, remind them that if they do not follow the probation officers' orders, they can be charged with the separate offence of breach of probation.

And the last thing most of them want is more trouble with the law.

The attitude seems to be, in many cases, get the thing over with.

Don Peterson and Dave Stallard, the two community services officers in the Victoria office at Douglas and Fisgard streets, provided Colonist reporter Stephen Hume with the names of some people who have performed the work.

These people, the officers thought, could provide an interesting cross-section of opinion about the program and its benefits, if any.

Hume, who has disguised the names of those with whom he spoke, relates the impressions of those obliged to do something for nothing.

Dennis thinks the community services program is the lesser of two evils. The greater evil is boredom.

"It's better than going to jail. But it's kind of a drag working eight hours a day for nothing," he said.

He doesn't have a long arrest record. He's 18 and he's been busted twice. The first time was for marijuana possession.

"It was a single joint I was fined $75," he said.

The second time was for breaking and entering. The judge gave Dennis nine months' probation and 40 hours community work.

Dennis worked off his hours landscaping and putting in lawns for the town of Sidney. He worked one week for 40 hours. At the end of the week the town took him on as a temporary employee to "see how I'd work out," as Dennis put it. They liked his work and hired him at the end of April.

Dennis worked eight months for the Sidney parks department. He was laid off on Jan. 1, but he said he will probably be hired on again in the summer. His probation is over in January.

His estimation of the community services program: "It's better than standing around the streets doing nothing.

Tony is 20. He has nothing nice to say about the program. He didn't like working for nothing, and he didn't feel

Peninsula: Co-operate or go dry

By NANCY BROWN
Colonist Correspondent

Critical water supply problems in Sidney and Brentwood could be held off this summer if Saanich Peninsula authorities co-operate, Central Saanich Ald. Dave Hill told the inaugural meeting Tuesday of the Saanich Peninsula Water Commission.

He was responding to a request from Sidney that the township be allowed to drill a new well immediately to offset an expected water shortage this summer.

Sidney will, however, go ahead, in conjunction with North Saanich, on an investigation of possible well locations and cost-sharing.

Hill said there was concern that new wells would draw down the level of all wells.

"I hope we will have better co-operation between the water suppliers without a bunch of political hangups this summer," said Hill.

"I suggest that for the next few months it is going to be up to the senior municipal staffs on the peninsula to get together to try to throw what water supply we have to one another without some trying to hold onto the water as we had a tendency to do in the past."

Hill also suggested that if any water restrictions had to be imposed during the summer, all three municipalities should act together and have uniform regulations.

Commissioner Joseph Taylor said the whole peninsula was in a desperate situation.

Commissioner Harry Peard said water in wells and reservoirs was going down even at a time of year when needs were at a minimum.

Commissioner James Lang said input into wells was less than at this time last year, and the quality of the water was also deteriorating.

"We are in trouble right now," he said.

"The situation is critical," Hill commented.

He said he had been able to persuade Central Saanich council to put a five-acre "hold" on all new plans for subdivisions.

The commission also decided to ask Capital Region District engineer Norman Howard to advise on the possibilities of immediate relief through connection with Greater Victoria Water Board supplies.

He said he felt some connection could be installed by summer if several contractors were employed simultaneously.

The commissioners doubted that such swift action was likely, but asked for a report.

A five-man committee was formed to start negotiations with the Greater Victoria Water Board for the extension of water to the peninsula.

Firemen accept last year's pact

Victoria firefighters voted "almost" unanimously Tuesday night to accept terms of a new agreement with the city. The move ends a dispute that is more than a year old.

Under the agreement which covers only 1976, the 104 firefighters get wage parity with their Vancouver counterparts. This was called for in earlier binding arbitration, but the city had declined to match the interim Vancouver pay level on fear of being penalized for exceeding the Anti-Inflation Board guidelines.

The compromise proposal accepted by the firefighters provides for deductions from the new pay level to comply with a rollback ordered by the AIB in the 1975 award. There is also agreement for recovery of money in the event of a rollback in the 1976 award.

The agreement, which ends a strike threat, provides another $35 a month giving the first-class firefighter $1,422. The deduction for the rollback is expected to wipe out $32 of the increase.

A spokesman for the firefighters said the union is expected to sign the contract with representatives of the Greater Victoria Labor Relations Association today.

Negotiations for a 1977 agreement are already in the preliminary stages.

Parents told:

Shot girl faces life paralysed

Doctors have told the parents of a five-year-old Brentwood Bay girl that she is probably paralysed for life following an accident with a handgun last Saturday, Central Saanich Police Chief Robert Miles said Tuesday.

Tara Michelle Harknett was showing the .22-calibre handgun to some friends on Saturday, apparently after taking it from a drawer in her parents' bedroom and loading it herself, Miles said.

A neighbor boy who was holding the handgun discharged it, and the bullet entered the girl's chest, puncturing a lung and shattering her spinal cord.

She is paralysed from the waist down, and doctors have told her parents the damage is irreparable, Miles said.

Tara's parents were away at the time, and two teenagers in the home were babysitting her.

Her father said the gun, the type frequently referred to as a "Saturday-night special," had not been working properly, and he had put it away, thinking it could not be fired. The gun was not properly registered, Miles said, but no charges were contemplated.

He said the incident should serve as a warning to any gun-owner who might think a weapon did not work.

"He should contact police, who will come and dispose of it," Miles said.

Union decides to drop action against eleven

A membership meeting of Victoria's outside civic workers decided Tuesday night to drop charges against 11 members accused of contravening union policy by working on the Oct. 14 day of protest.

James Walker, president of the outside workers' local of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, said the vote was almost unanimous. There was one opposing vote out of about 60.

The charges had been brought against the 11 by other rank-and-file members. Nine of those involved are parks employees and the other two are in the sanitation department.

Walker said after the three-hour meeting that he would be proposing revision of the constitution to prevent a repetition of "the way charges are brought up."

He said the present method of electing a trial committee before the membership even decided people should be charged was "not a very organized way."

Before the meeting, Walker had said he was disturbed by reports the CUPE local was taking a tough stand against those who went against the policy of observing the Oct. 15 national labor protest against anti-inflation laws.

Thieves take $5,000 goods from home

Oak Bay police estimate that $5,000 worth of goods was taken in a burglary of a home on Cadboro Bay.

Joy Marampon discovered the break-in Monday afternoon when she returned to 2171 Cadboro Bay from a weekend trip to West Vancouver with her husband, Lucio. They had left the house vacant since Friday.

Missing were a Sony stereo component valued at $1,000, a $600 brass sextant, a black-and-white television set, guitar, camera, digital clock radio, watch, portable typewriter, gold ring and opal earrings.

Police said entry was gained through a basement door which was forced open.

Soft-spoken Indian leader says:

Land fate 'up to all people'

The average Canadian will have to take an active interest in the settlement of Indian land claims if claims are to be decided fairly.

Indian leader Harold Cardinal, in his ninth year as president of the Indian Association of Alberta, told a large audience Tuesday night at the Victoria central library that federal and provincial governments will look to the people for a sense of direction in their decision-making on land claims.

Cardinal stressed, however, that no group in Canada could match the advertising powers of multi-national corporations or public relations experts hired by provincial and federal governments to sell their side to the public.

If the land claims issue is not resolved fairly, the sense of grievance will never be wiped out among Indians in this country, Cardinal said.

Wearing a buckskin jacket and speaking carefully, almost softly, Cardinal told an audience of non-native and native people that the question of development in the Northwest Territories and the Athabasca oil sands in Alberta would become a focal point of interest to whites and Indians alike.

Cardinal, a Cree, said the B.C. government is "copping out" if it thinks the issue of land claims is the responsibility of the federal government.

"What would the province say if the federal government suddenly decided to give three-quarters of the B.C. land base back to the Indians?" he asked.

Remarking on his new book, The Rebirth of Canada's Indians, Cardinal said the election of a Parti Quebecois government in Quebec has forced all Canadians to ask themselves: Who are we, where are we going, and what kind of legacy are we going to leave our children.

"At the present time, Indians enjoy a constitutional relationship with the federal Crown. Indians must decide if they want to maintain a trusteeship with a substantially revised federal government, and if they want to place their trust in another group, especially since the government hasn't made any outstanding contribution to the Indian way of life in the last 100 years."

Canadians had a responsibility to present and future generations to find answers to questions that would be raised in the critical period over the next two to four years, he said.

"Leaders, both Indian and white, should leave the acting to Hollywood and start finding answers to the social problems that plague us all," Cardinal said.

"Indians do not have a monopoly on injustice. Many peoples in this country and other countries have been subjected to injustice. Our goal is to learn from past injustices so they don't happen in the future."

Cardinal said the federal government had failed to make land settlements with more than half the native population in Canada.

Victoria woman, 85, first traffic fatality

An 85-year-old woman became Greater Victoria's first traffic fatality of 1977.

Florence Nightingale Smith, of 212-1147 Quadra, died Tuesday about two hours after she was struck at Fort and Quadra by a truck driven by 25-year-old Stephen Gregory Henson of 1010 McKenzie, Saanich.

Police said the accident occurred shortly before 11 a.m. when the elderly pedestrian was attempting to cross the street at the corner. Henson's truck, police said, was apparently travelling south on Quadra and was making a left turn onto Fort.

She was taken to Victoria General Hospital but was pronounced dead at 1:40 p.m., police said.

Victoria city police are appealing to any witnesses to call the traffic division at 384-4111.

Pump meet now Monday

The Oak Bay sewerage advisory committee will meet Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the council chambers to consider a consulting engineer's report on a proposal to use Trial Island for a sewage pumping station site.

The proposal is one alternative being explored by the committee to a location on the Shoal Bay shoreline selected earlier by the Capital Region Board.

The meeting had been scheduled for tonight, but committee chairman Ald. John Goult changed the date because some members had other commitments.

Switch to night sittings

Mika readies access bylaw

Rookie Saanich Ald. John Mika fulfilled his main election promise Monday when he served notice of motion to amend council's procedure bylaw.

Mika's motion, which will be introduced at the next council meeting, would make council and its business more accessible to residents.

He is also proposing council meetings be switched from afternoons to nights and he wants agendas of all council and major committee meetings advertised in advance.

He is also seeking changes to give direct and unrestricted opportunity for residents to address council; redefinition of circumstances under which meetings may be closed to the press and public, and clarification of rights of the press to record meetings.

Several candidates in last November's Saanich election ran on the platform of reverting to night meetings and an end to the numerous closed meetings of council.

More men soon for search unit

More men are on their way to Comox to bolster the beleagured 442 Search and Rescue Squadron.

Transfer of 35 men to the squadron would enable crews to respond to weekend emergencies in 30 minutes, compared with the two hours now allowed, Lt.-Gen. William Carr, chief of Canada's Air Command, told a Victoria press conference Tuesday.

He also said there was a possibility that additional Buffalo aircraft would be sent to Comox to supplement the fleet of three now used primarily for rescue missions.

In a brief reference to a campaign by Campbell River volunteer coast guard agent Dr. Robert Somerville to have rescue facilities on Canada's West Coast upgraded, Carr said: "Somerville has been a big help to us with his constructive criticism, but one should not attempt to draw comparisons between the East Coast and the West Coast."

Somerville has charged that the East Coast has more equipment than the West Coast despite figures showing that the Pacific region handles more incidents than the Atlantic region.

Carr said a vast number of the incidents occurring on the West Coast took place in coastal areas as opposed to stretches of open sea off the East Coast.

He said two additional helicopters would be located at Comox as part of the recently announced multi-million dollar marine search-and-rescue improvement program.

Admitting that "we have had problems obtaining replacement parts for the Buffalos at Comox," Carr said the problem was being solved.

The possibility of improving the capacity of the rescue aircraft was under study, as well as replacement of the Voodoo jet interceptor. "We have to replace our existing aircraft if we are to fulfil our commitments," he said.

While in Victoria, Carr, the national commissioner of Boy Scouts, met local scout officials to discuss plans for the Canadian Jamboree being held this year in Prince Edward Island.

Gunman aborts holdup

City police were searching for a stockily-built man after an abortive armed holdup late Tuesday at the Shop-Easy store on Cook Street.

The masked man produced a shotgun and demanded money after entering the store about 9 p.m.

He left without anything after being told by a clerk there was no money, police said.

Labor vote interference 'nonsense'

By DON COLLINS
Colonist Reporter

Victoria MLA Charles Barber dismissed as "nonsense" Tuesday claims that either he or the New Democratic Party had tried to manipulate tonight's Victoria Labor Council elections.

"That's totally unfounded and total nonsense," Barber said as reports circulated that he and his party wanted John Schibli replaced as council president.

Schibli is expected to be challenged only by Jack Groves, a former council president and part of a group of dissenters.

Earlier, Groves (International Woodworkers of America), Linda Baker (B.C. Government Employees' Union), James Walker (Canadian Union of Public Employees), and Larry Tickner (United Brotherhood of Carpenters) were nominated along with Schibli, who is also with the carpenters.

Tickner has not been associated with the dissenters. But the others decided among themselves who was best equipped to challenge Schibli and, while they made no announcement of their findings, Groves emerged as the choice.

Nearly all of the key figures in both camps are members of the New Democratic Party, something that would appear to discount the possibility of party politics. However, the labor council, like the rest of the labor movement in B.C., has felt the effects of a serious split over the question of leadership.

Schibli supported controversial B.C. Federation of Labor secretary Len Guy during the recent federation convention, while Groves, Ms. Baker and Walker supported the unsuccessful election bid of Art Kube of the Canadian Labor Congress.

The bitter fight that preceded the Guy re-election was dotted with all kinds of accusations, including claims that the fine hand of NDP leader David Barrett was playing a part in efforts to oust Guy.

Party faithful not only denied such reports, but were extremely critical of them.

The tough-talking Guy was considered to be standing in the way of those who would bring more sophistication to the labor movement. Many of those who opposed him were concerned with attacks he made on the NDP during its years in government.

Some informants say the bad feelings have spilled down to the labor council level and that efforts are being made to defeat those who backed Guy.

But others within the labor movement say they find this hard to believe. They tend to think the situation has been highly exaggerated.

Those who argue against this, however, point out that Ms. Baker, most outspoken of the dissenters, is a member of the NDP executive in Victoria and has been appointed by Barber to his recently-formed committee on industrial democracy.

However, Barber is said to have appointed her strictly because of the enthusiasm she showed for the prospect of studying the industrial democracy system that allows employee participation.

Ms. Baker, who has come a long way at the age of 25, is gradually becoming a controversial figure. While Groves and Walker have remained guarded in their comment, she has attacked the labor council leadership for what she describes as "tunnel vision," and says the time has come for fresh ideas.

It is difficult to determine how much support she has, but it is known that she is considered by many veteran labor men to be nothing more than overly ambitious.

Ms. Baker is expected to seek the first vice-presidency tonight. She is currently second vice-president.

Those close to the scene say there now appears little doubt that Schibli will be returned for a third one-year term as president.

Meanwhile, Barber says he would have to be "stupid" to want to interfere with a labor council election.

"The labor council is an independent body that makes its own decisions," he said. "We work with them (council) and are happy to work with them."

He said he respected Schibli and would show the same respect to anyone else elected.
